

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

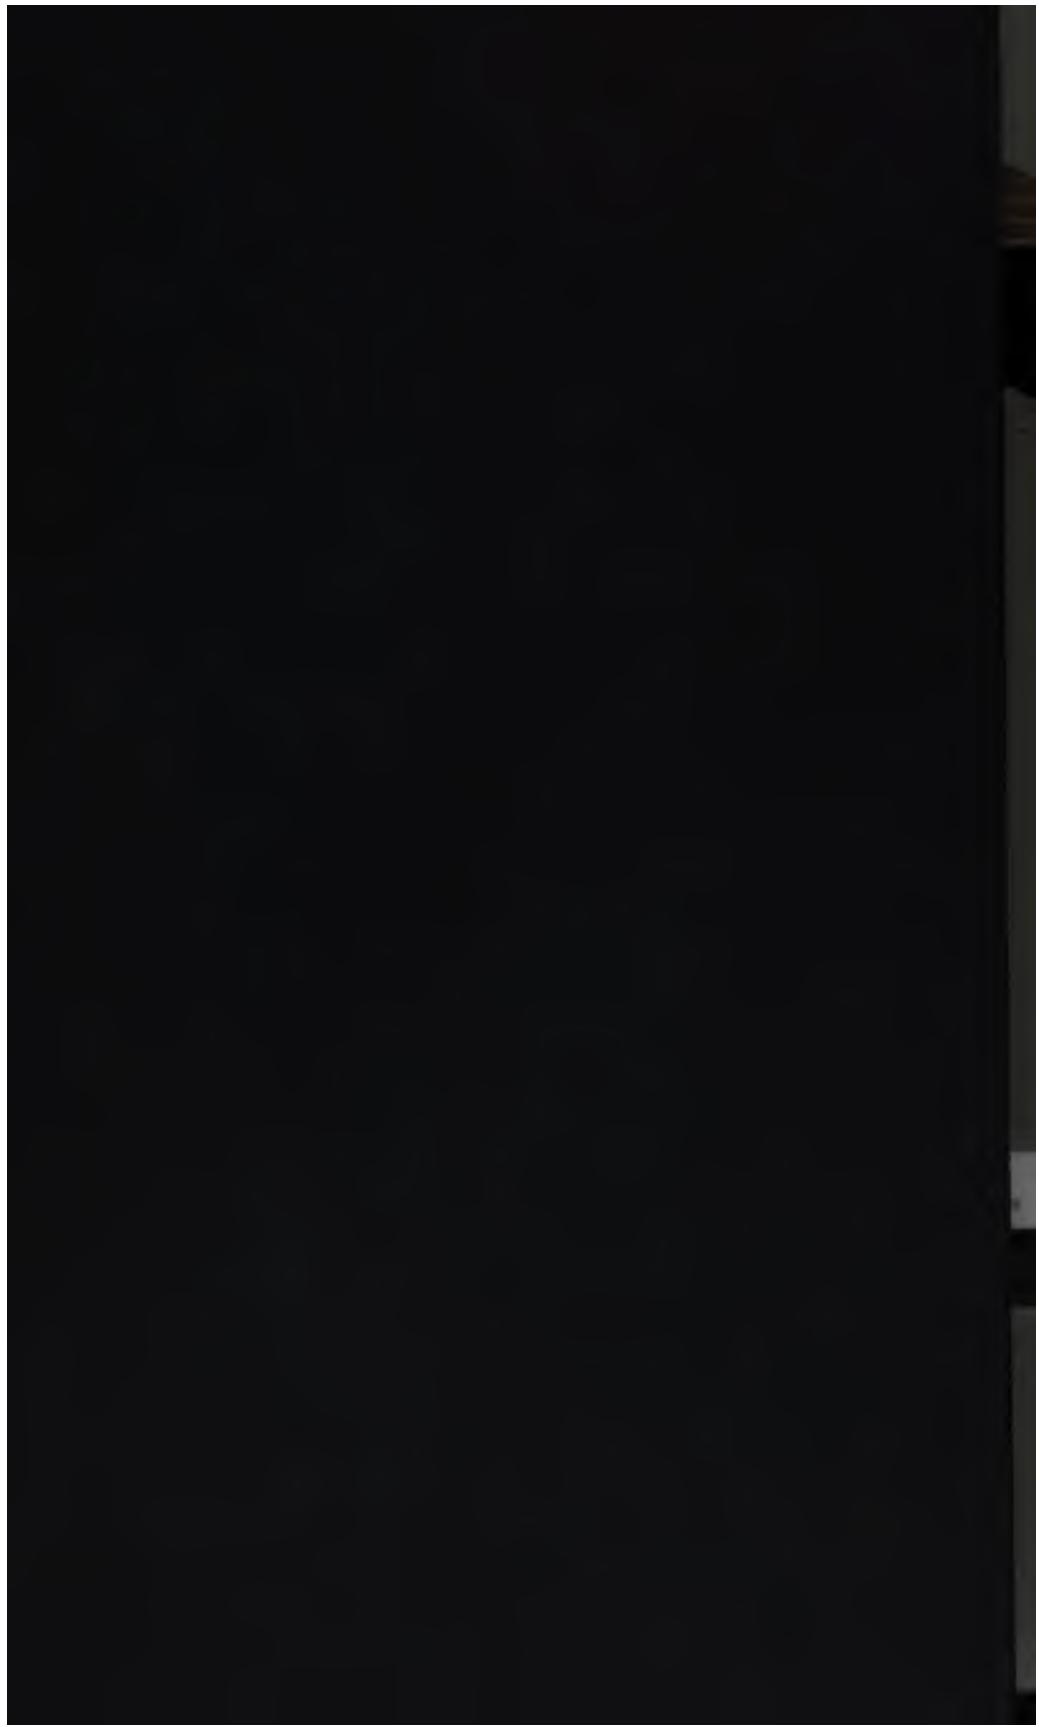

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

FROM THE BEQUEST OF JAMES WALKER
(Class of 1814)
President of Harvard College

"Preliminary list given to works in the Intellectual and Moral Sciences"

•

THE CHURCH-HISTORY OF BRITAIN;

FROM
THE BIRTH OF JESUS CHRIST, UNTIL THE YEAR M.DC.XLVIII.

ENDEAVOURED
BY THOMAS FULLER, D.D.
PREBENDARY OF SARUM.

A NEW EDITION, IN SIX VOLUMES,

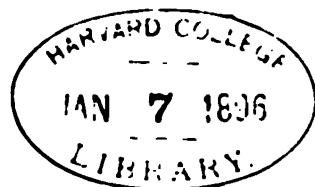

BY THE REV. J. S. BREWER, M.A.

VOLUME I.

OXFORD:
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.
M.DCCC.XLV.

~~III.8075~~

Br 326.55.21

Halieas family
(6 vols.)

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

IN preparing this new edition of FULLER'S CHURCH HISTORY, the principal object has been to examine and correct the references. If attention to this point be incumbent on every editor of an historical work, it is eminently so in the present instance. The vivacity of Fuller's style, his wit, his moderation, the exuberance of his fancy, have made him a general favourite; but the praise for these excellencies has often been qualified by insinuations affecting his veracity. From the days of Heylyn, his literary competitor, to those of Warburton, and, still later, up to the present time, it has been fashionable to decry the History of the Church, not so much for those errors which are incidental to all works of this nature, and might be excused considering the disadvantages under which Fuller laboured, as for the more serious faults of partiality and disingenuity.

Now without entering into a laboured refutation of these charges, it may be sufficient to remark, that a careful examination of Fuller's authorities with the statements made in his narrative, has ended in a result favourable to his industry, judgment, and accuracy.

To the far more serious imputation of intentional dishonesty, the work itself seems to furnish a sufficient answer. Had Fuller wished to gain favour with the rising powers, how could he hope to promote his object by dedicating the different Books and Sections of his History to such of his friends and patrons as were notorious for their loyalty and adherence to the church? When the work was first printed, the power and influence of the republicans were at their greatest height; nothing was to be gained by a needless profession of loyalty or religious principles: yet so far was he from seeking favour with the uppermost party, or shrinking, like many others, from the avowal of his sentiments, that there is scarcely one among those whom he has thus recorded as his friends, who had not suffered in his person or his property, for adherence to the royal party.

The truth of these remarks might be further shewn by reference to the Life prefixed to this volume; a work which has now become comparatively rare, notwithstanding that it passed through two editions within two years after its publication. It was thought that a biography, written by a contemporary, was likely to be more interesting to the reader, than any more recent memoir, notwithstanding its numerous affectations and occasional obscurity of style. Besides its value, as an accurate summary of events, it is important in this respect, as shewing the estimation in which Fuller was held by some of his contemporaries ; and how little that estimation was affected by the disparaging remarks of his opponents.

To this Life a few notes have been added, consisting chiefly of extracts from his various writings, supplying deficiencies in the dates, or correcting occasional inaccuracies.

In compliance with the rule uniformly adopted at the University Press, the spelling of words has been remodelled throughout the present work. In the orthography of proper names, especially of those which occur in the earlier volumes, spelled sometimes in one way, sometimes in another, such forms have been adopted as were warranted by the best manuscripts, or, if possible, by letters and public documents. On some occasions it has been found impossible or inexpedient to adhere strictly to this rule, more particularly in the names of Fuller's contemporaries.

In settling the chronology, and determining the marginal dates, the editor has allowed himself greater liberty; for this obvious reason :

In the folio edition of the work, published at various presses, and bearing evident marks of haste, the dates were arranged in parallel columns, opposite the paragraphs to which they referred. By this means it frequently happened that a date seemed to apply to an entire page or section, which in reality was intended only for part of it ; from the carelessness of the printer, or haste in the composition of the work, the numbers sometimes became misplaced, and attached to the wrong paragraph; an oversight which has led the readers of Fuller into serious errors on more than one occasion.

Another very fruitful source of error was the method of reckoning, not by the civil but the ecclesiastical year. To obviate such difficulties as were likely in this way to perplex the reader, it was necessary to correct the chronology throughout, to adopt the modern notation, and to insert fresh dates where they were requisite.

The great uncertainty which pervades all our earlier annals is obvious to any one who is slightly acquainted with this portion of English History. Not only was it usual for different writers to commence their years with different months, but even the same writer, for example Matthew Paris, when compiling from different sources, either from carelessness or design, adopted different modes of computation in one and the same chronicle. Of this uncertainty Fuller has given a remarkable instance in this volume. It is not decided whether we must refer such an event as the conversion of a whole nation to the year 99, or to a hundred years later.*

After a careful examination of the different systems of chronology adopted by different writers, it has been deemed advisable in the earlier portion of the work to follow the arrangement of Florence of Worcester, or rather the MS. copy of Florence, preserved in Corpus Christi College, Oxford. For the use of this valuable MS. (which is free from the errors of the printed copy) he has to thank the Rev. E. Greswell, fellow of that college. Florence is succeeded by Nicholas Trivet, a most exact and careful annalist; public papers, rolls, and documents have served as a guide from the period of the Reformation; especially the notes to Godwin's treatise De Præsulibus Angliæ, edited by Dr. Richardson; a work of the utmost value to the student of ecclesiastical history.

* See Church History, p. 26.

The editor has now only to acknowledge his obligations to the Rev. R. H. Barham, of St. Paul's Cathedral, for such genealogical notes in the first volume as are signed with the letter B. These, as well as all other additions to the original work, are distinguished by brackets.

KING'S COLLEGE,
May, 1845.

o

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF THAT REVEREND DIVINE AND EXCELLENT HISTORIAN,
— DR. THOMAS FULLER.

“ Si post Fata venit Gloria, sic propero.”—MART.

OXFORD:

Printed for R. HORTON, and are to be Sold at the Royal Exchange, Westminster Hall, and Fleet Street.

1662.

THE LIFE OF THE REVEREND AND EXCELLENT
DR. THOMAS FULLER.

THE ample subject of this incompetent relation is doctor Thomas Fuller, to whose dust we do avowedly consecrate this elegy—the doctor of famous memory.

He was born at Alwincl^e, an obscure town in Northamptonshire, some five miles from Oundel, in the year of our Lord 1608^b, a place now equalled to, and vying honour with any seed-plot (in that county) of virtue, learning, and religion ; of which hereafter to its glory it shall be said, that this man was born there.

▪ In his preface printed in this note, the author speaks as follows :
“ To the reader. This reverend person deceased, who while he shined here gave a full meridian light to all kind of history, sets with this shadow in his own, the dark side of that lanthorn to himself, whose lucidations had discovered all before it, and rescued so many brave memoirs from the violence of time. Pity it is that such excellent persons (for it is their common fate) should be so neglectful of themselves, while they are so serviceable to the world, which reaps all, with a careless or ungrateful return to the authors of their store and increase.

“ And as the intrinsical worth of diamonds, exerts not its lustre without a foil ; so it fareth with the most costly and rich shrines of those resplendent and shining

“ virtues, erected in the memory and fame of worthy men, which are always shewed by lamp, or some other fæcacious and borrowed light, that only directs to the solemnity, and invites veneration, but cannot contribute nor add any real estimate and honour to the saint himself.”

“ The account of this reverend doctor deceased states itself in this apology : it pretends not to be any of his least and inconsiderable relic, and it doth alike justify itself from being his legend ; merely the worth of so deserving a person, (which no pen hath yet undertook or attempted,) for civility’s sake, hath obliged this essay, which to your easiest censure is here submitted.”

▪ According to the computation in the Biographia Britannica ; and a MS. note in a copy of his life in the British Museum.

He was the son of Mr. Tho. Fuller, the minister of the same town¹, a man of a blameless and as private life, who spent himself in the discharge of his pastoral office to which God had called him, without embarking himself in the busy controversies of his time, that laboured under the fatigues of most importunate puritanism and pleading popery.

Part of this privacy bestowed itself fruitfully upon the youth of the venerable doctor, (who had lost some time under the ill menage of a raw and unskillful schoolmaster, so that in a little space, such a proficiency was visibly seen in him, that it was a question, whether he owed more to his father for his birth or education; both which had so happily and so easily concurred, that he was admirably learned before it could be supposed he had been taught, and this will seem no paradox to those who knew his felicity of memory, which he owed not to the lubricity of art, but the certainty of nature²).

Having under this tuition passed the just time of adolescence in those puerile studies, at twelve years of age³, this hopeful slip was translated to Cambridge, where he first settled in Queen's College, of which a near kinsman of his, Dr. [Davenant], was then president. This was a sphere wherein his reluctant virtues and conspicuous abilities had room to exert themselves, so that he filled the eyes of that university with a just expectation of his future lustre.

Here he successively passed the degrees of bachelor and master of arts⁴, with such general commendation, and at

¹ Of St. Peter's. To which he was presented by William Cecil, earl of Exeter. Biog. ab. Fuller mentions his father in his Church History, and speaks of his acquaintance with Greenham the celebrated puritan. Ch. Hist. V. p. 193.

² Fuller's mother was a sister to Dr. John Davenant, afterwards bishop of Salisbury, to whom undoubtedly he was much indebted for his early education. Aubrey says: "that he was a boy of a pregnant wit, and when Bp. Davenant and his father were discoursing, he would be by and hearken, now and then put in, and sometimes beyond expectation of his years." Letters from the Bulldog, p. 174.

³ A.D. 1620. In 1621 his uncle was promoted to the see of Salisbury, having been succeeded in the headship by Dr. John Mansel.

⁴ Bachelor of arts in 1624, master of arts 1628. The Biog. Brit. from the University Register.

such unusual age, that such a commencement was not within memory^g.

During his residence in this college, a fellowship was vacant, for which the doctor became candidate, prompted thereunto by a double plea of merit and interest, besides the desire of the whole house; but a statute of the college prevailing against them all, which admitted not two fellows of the said county of Northampton, the doctor quitted his pretensions and designation to that preferment. And though he was well assured of a dispensation from the strict limitation of that statute to be obtained for him, yet he totally declined it, as not willing to owe his rise and advancement to the courtesy to so ill a precedent, that might usher in more immodest intrusions upon the privileges and laws of the college^h.

But this gave him a fair occasion to transfer himself to Sidney collegeⁱ, whither by some of his choice and learned friends he had often been invited. He had not long been here, but he was chosen minister of St. Bennet's parish in the town of Cambridge^k, in whose church he offered the ^g He stayed at this college eight years, according to his own statement, in the History of the University of Cambridge, p. 123.

^h His uncle however, Bp. Davenant, used much entreaty with the master, to obtain a fellowship for his nephew; as may be seen by his letters, in the Tanner Collection, in the Bodleian.

ⁱ Sidney was a very poor college. In his History of the University, Fuller says: "It is as yet but early days with this college, which hath not seen sixty years; yet hath it been fruitful in worthy men proportionably to the age thereof, and I hope it will daily increase. Now though it be only the place of the parents, and proper to him as the greater to bless his child (Heb. vii. 6.), yet it is the duty of the child to pray for his parents, in which relation my best desires are due to this foundation, my mother for my

" last eight years in this university. May her lamp never lack light for the oil, or oil for the light thereof! 'Zoar, is it not a little one?' Yet who shall despise the day of small things?" p. 217. From this then we may infer that Fuller's stay at the university lasted about sixteen years, which would make him twenty-eight at the time of leaving it.

It is most probable that Fuller was received at Sidney, through the influence of Bp. Davenant with Dr. Ward, the master of it, his most dear and intimate friend. And if the computation in the previous notes be correct, he migrated thither in 1628, the year in which he took his master's degree.

^k In his History of the University of Cambridge, referring to his presentation, Fuller states a fact which seems to have escaped the notice of his biographers: "I most thankfully confess myself, primity of his ministerial fruits, which, like apples of gold in pictures of silver, (sublime divinity in the most ravishing elegancies,) attracted the audience of the university, by whose dilated commendations he was generally known at that age at which most men do but peep into the world.

These his great sufficiencies (being now but about the age of twenty-three years) tendered him a prebendary of Salisbury¹, and at the same time a fellowship in Sidney college. They were both eximious preferments as the times then were, the estimation of either being equally great mutatis mutandis; but the doctor's inclination biassed him to the more active and profitable incumbency, into which his inbred piety and devotion had from the first of his resolutions induced him. Whereupon he retired from that university, and betook himself to the priestly function, being thereunto ordained by the right reverend father in God the bishop of Salisbury.

This being the king's donation, was some further reason for abandoning his most pleasant studies and conversation in Cambridge, for that also by the statutes of both universities it is provided, that no person who shall have ten pound per annum in the king's books shall be capable of a fellowship in either of them. So Providence was pleased to dispose of him in each of these academical honorary intendments, that his fluent should not run silently in those streams, contribute only to their emanations, but with same discharge itself into the ocean, reciprocate honour and desert with the world.

Having thus launched and being so furnished, he set forth in the course of the ministry, exchanging those delightful privacies of his college studies (which laid the

" the says, once a member at large
" of this house Bennett college) 74. The History of Cambridge
" when they were pleased, above was published in 1655; The living
" twenty years since, freely with- was then valued at 4*l* or 1d
" out my thoughts thereto to 1. " Of Netherbury in Ecclesone,
" choose me minister of St Bene- " to which he was collated upon
" dict's church, the parish adjoin- " the decease of Dr John Raw-
" ing and in their patronage " p. " linson on the 18th of June,
" 1631 " Blog Brit

happy foundations and beginnings of those excellent books^m, which successively teemed those productions and propagations of divine learning and knowledge, of which more hereafter) for the troublesome cure of a parish and unfortunate pulpit.

That prebend of Salisbury was a commodious step to another more profitable place, which for its vicinity to that cathedral, and being in the same diocese, did easily commend itself without the aid and instance of the patron or other inducements to the doctor's acceptance; but yet he did not over-readily entertain the kindness of the proffer, till after a serious scrutiny of himself and his abilities to discharge the requisite duties the place called for; and after a very full and satisfactory inquiry of his parishioners.

It was the rectory of Broad Windsor in Dorsetshire, a place far distanced from his native country, and remoter from his university. "A prophet hath no honour of his own;" and therefore it was doubled to him in another. The accommodation both in reference to his maintenance and respect from this people was very noble, and which afforded great expedience to the doctor's other labours, which were bountifully cherished under the tuition of the ministry.

After some while employed here in the pastoral office, the doctor was desired by some friends to dignify his desert with the degrees which his time and standing by the rules of the university afforded him: whereunto the doctor out of a reverence to his honourable calling was well inclined, and accordingly prepared for his departure to Cambridge to take the degree of bachelor of divinityⁿ.

Having taken care therefore to supply his place for the time of his absence, at his setting forth he was acquainted that four of his chief parishioners, with his good leave, were ready to wait on him to Cambridge, to testify their exceeding engagements, it being the sense and request of his whole parish. This kindness was so present and so

^m The first of which was a poem, 1631. See the list of his works at entitled "David's heinous Sin, the end of this Biography.
" hearty Repentance, and heavy ⁿ In 1635. Biographia Brit.
" Punishment." Published in from the University Register.

resolutely pressed, that the doctor, with many thanks for that and other demonstrations of their love towards him, gladly accepted of their company, and with his customary innate pleasantness entertained their time to the journey's end.

At his coming to Cambridge he was most welcomely treated and saluted by his friends and acquaintance, and visited almost by all considerable persons of the university and town; especially of his parishioners of St. Bennet: fame and love vying which should render him most addresses, to the great delight and satisfaction of his fellow-travellers and neighbours in having a minister who was so highly and yet no less deservedly honoured, but to the trouble of the modest doctor, who was then forced to busy his invention with compliments, to which he was most naturally averse.

At this commencement there proceeded with him in the same degree of bachelor of divinity three other reverend persons, all with general applause and commendation; and therefore to do them no wrong, must forbear to give the deceased doctor his particular due: only thus much by the way may be added, that this commencement cost the doctor for his particular, the sum of seven-score pounds, an evidence of his liberality and largeness of mind proportionable to his other capacities, and yet than which nothing was less studied.

At his departure he was dismissed with as honourable valedictions, and so he returned in the same company (who had out of their own purse contributed another addition of honour to that solemnity) to his said rectory at Broad-Windsor, resolving there to spend himself and the time of his pilgrimage amongst his dear and loving charge.

In the amenity and retirements of this rural life some perfection was given to those pieces which soon after blessed this age (an account of all which is reserved to the conclusion of these collections^a): from this pleasant pro-

^a The first of these was dated from "Broad-Windsor, March 6 1638," i.e. 1639, according to our computation. In the titlepage the author styles himself, "B. D. Prebendary of Narum, late of Sidney College in Cambridge." The Proph. Night was a much

spect he drew that excellent piece of the Holy War, Pisgah Sight, and other tracts relating thereto; so that what was said bitterly of some tyrants, that they made whole countries vast solitudes and deserts, may be inverted to the eulogy of this doctor, that he in these recesses made deserts the solitudes of Israel, the frequented path and track of all ingenuous and studious persons.

But contemplation, and the immurement of his vast spirit within the precincts of his parish, (although both delightful and profitable, those foreign travails of his brain above mentioned affording the one, and his pious labours at home yielding the other,) grew tedious and wearisome to his active and free genius, which was framed by nature for converse and general intelligence, not to be smothered in such an obscurity.

To this inclination also the unquietness and trepidations of those times (then scared with the news of a war about religion and reformation which the Scots pretended) did oversway him. He was very sensible whither those first commotions did tend, and that some heavy disaster did, in those angry clouds which impended over the nation, more particularly threaten the clergy. He was then also married unto a virtuous young gentlewoman, and by her had born there his eldest son, now a hopeful plant in the same college and university where his father had his education^p. These motives, concurring with that general fame and esteem of him, drew him to the consultation of a city life, where both security, honour, and the advantages of learning, did demonstratively promise the completion of his desires and intended tranquillity, destined already to some public works which were then in designment.

Removing therefore to London, having obtained his fair dismission from that charge in the country, he continued his pious endeavours of preaching in most of the voiced pulpits of London, (being cried up for one of the most excellent preachers of his age,) but most usually in the inns of court.

later production, the dedication “bey, July 7. 1650.”
bearing the date, “Waltham Ab- ^p Named John.

He was from thence, by the master and brotherhood of the Savoy, (as well as earnestly desired and entreated by that small parish,) complimented to accept of the lecturer's place; which having undertaken after some instance, he did most piously and effectually discharge, witness the great confluence of affected hearers from distant congregations, insomuch that his own cure were, in a sense, excommunicated from the church, unless their timous diligence kept pace with their devotion; the doctor affording them no more time for their extraordinaries on the Lord's day, than what he allowed his habituated abstinence on all the rest. He had in his narrow chapel two audiences, one without the pale, the other within; the windows of that little church and the sextonry so crowded, as if bees had swarmed to his mellifluous discourse.

He continued here to the great satisfaction of his people and the neighbouring nobility and gentry, till our unhappy unnatural wars had made a dismal progress through the whole nation; labouring all that while in private and in public to beget a right understanding among all men of the king's most righteous cause, which through seduction and popular fury was generally maligned. His exhortations to peace and obedience were his constant subjects in the church, (all his sermons were such liturgies,) while his secular days were spent in vigorously promoting the king's affairs either by a sudden reconciliation or potent assistance⁴.

To this end, on the anniversary day of his late majesty's inauguration, which was the 17th day of March, 1642, he preached at St. Peter's, Westminster, on this text, 2 Sam. xix. 30: Yea, let him take all, so that my lord the king return in peace. A theme so distasteful to the ring-leaders of the rebellion who had on purpose so scandalously driven him from his court and parliament, that he might never with any pleasure think of returning to them till he had vindicated his honour upon the abettors of those tumults), and so well and loyally enforced by him, that drew not only a suspicion from the moderate misled party of parliament, but an absolute odium on him from the grandees and principals in the rebellion¹.

⁴ About this time, that is, in 1640, the celebrated convocation began at Westminster, in which the new canons were passed. This gave occasion to the impeachment of the bishops by the parliament. Our author's own part on this sad occasion may be seen in his Church History, vol. vi. p. 164.

There were few or none of the orthodox clergy then remaining within their lines of communication (new invented limits for the city's old liberties), some being dead in restraint, or through more harsh and cruel dealing, the rest ousted and silenced; so that their inspection and espial was confined almost to the doctor's pulpit as to public assemblies; where, nevertheless, he desisted not, nor altered from his main course, the doctrine of allegiance, till such time as the covenant was obtruded upon his conscience, and must, through his persuasions, be likewise pressed upon his people.

Several false rumours and cavils there are about his carriage and opinion touching that sacrilegious thing by persons, who were distanced as far from the knowledge of those passages, as fortunately from being concerned and engaged within the reach of that snare^s. It was not only " To the troubles then beclouding this kingdom, and the opposition which he expected to encounter, Fuller alluded in his Holy State, which, though printed in 1642, was, as he tells us in his address to the reader, prepared a year before.

" Now (he says) I will turn
" my pen into prayer, that God
" would be pleased to discloud
" these gloomy days with the " beams of his mercy: which if I " may be so happy as to see, it
" will then encourage me to count
" it freedom to serve two apprenticeships (God spinning out the " thick thread of my life so long)
" in writing the Ecclesiastical History from Christ's time to our " days, if I shall from remoter
" parts be so planted as to enjoy
" the benefit of walking and standing libraries.—Meanwhile I " will stop the leakage of my soul,

" and what heretofore hath run out
" in writing shall hereafter (God " willing) be improved in constant
" preaching, in what place soever
" God's providence and friends'
" good will shall fix [me]."

" The author unquestionably alludes, among others, to the celebrated William Lilly the astrologer. He had accused Fuller of dishonesty, in first taking the solemn league and covenant, in compliance with the orders of the parliament, and then taking refuge with the king at Oxford.
" He took the covenant twice for " the parliament, before my face
" in the Savoy church; invited
" others to it, yet, apostate-like,
" ran within few days to Oxford,
" and then whined to his companions, and protested the countess
" of R—— made him take it."
Lilly's Hist. p. 172. ed. 1774.

The statement is very positive, easy, but most prudential, for other ecclesiastical persons to quit their livings who were out of the gripes and clutches of those ravenous reformists, in order to keep their conscience inviolable ; but it was difficulty enough of itself for the doctor to escape and get out of that place, where the next preferment would have been a dungeon.

Some velitations, transient discourses, he made about that frequent and thumbed subject of the reformation, the rather to suspend the busy censures of the parliament and their party ; wherein though he seemed to comply (but as far as the rule and example would allow), and indulge the misapprehension of those men, yet these his charitable disguises could not obscure him from the severe animadversions of several ministers eminent in those reforming times, particularly Mr. Saltmarsh. The contest betwixt them is so known in print that it will be needless to trouble the reader with it here¹ ; only thus much by digression in honour of this venerable doctor : Mr. Saltmarsh being long since dead, he hath in his book of the Worthies General of England (of which hereafter, given him a most honourable mention, and assigned him the place of his

and not a little malicious ; yet, if we may believe Fuller himself, was founded on a mistake. See his Church Hist. vi. p. 267.

¹ As for the controversy between our author and Mr. John Saltmarsh, it was occasioned by the Sermon of Reformation, which Fuller had preached at the Savoy (Heb. x. 1 in 1643). Against this sermon Saltmarsh published some animadversions, wherein he charged Fuller with several points of popery, and Fuller defended the arguments which he had delivered in a tract set forth under the title of Truth Maintained. In this tract he challenged Saltmarsh to a reply, but he appeared in the lists no more, giving his reason afterwards for it, that he would not shoot his arrows against a dead mark. He had been informed that Fuller was dead at Exeter

Upon this our author observes, that he himself has no cause to be angry with same for such a favorable falsehood. " May I make this true says he, of that false report, to the daily " See how Providence has crossed " it." The dead reported man is " still living ; the then living man " dead ; and seeing I survive to " go over his grave, I will tread " the more gently on the mould " thereof, using that courtesy on " him, which I received from " him." Boog. Brit. This was written May 20, 1661. See the Worthies, vii. p. 435. Saltmarsh died in 1647, in a state of insanity. He was a man of considerable ability and acuteness, but wild and extravagant, as might be expected. See the Boog. Brit. ii. and Wood's Athen. ii. 288 birth, education, and burial, registering him for an ornament of them all: so resplendent and durable was the doctor's charity. I may not omit one thing, that the doctor in recording and relating of the death of the said Mr. Salt-marsh, doth passionately reflect on the shortness of his life, and the acuteness of that fever which so violently ended him, reducing and applying it to the uncertainty of his own state; and we now unhappily see those curious presages of his pen verified and accomplished in his most immature and sudden decease.

To return to our subject; in the beginning of the year 1643 the said covenant was generally pressed, and a very great persecution soon after followed it. The doctor was settled in the love and affections of his own parish, besides other obligations to his numerous followers; so that the Covenant then tendered might seem like the bright side of that cloud (promising serenity and prosperity to him, as was insinuated to the doctor by many great parliamentarians) which showered down, after a little remoteness, such a black horrible tempest upon the clergy, nay, the church and three kingdoms. But the good doctor could not bow down his knee to that Baal-Berith, nor for any worldly considerations (enough whereof invited him even to fall down and worship, men of his great parts being infinitely acceptable to them) lend so much as an ear to their serpentine charms of religion and reformation.

Since therefore he could not continue with his cure without his conscience, and every day threatened the imposition of that illegal oath, he resolved to betake himself to God's providence, and to put himself directly under it, waving all indirect means and advantages whatsoever towards his security. In order thereunto, in April 1643, he deserted the city of London and privately conveyed himself to Oxford, to the no less sudden amazement of the faction here, who yet upon recollection quickly found their mistake, than to the unexpected content and joy of the loyal party there, who had every day Job's messengers of the plundering, ruins, and imprisonments of orthodox divines.

Oxford was then the common refuge and shelter of such persecuted persons, so that it never was nor is like to be a more learned university, (one breast being dried up by Cromwell's visitation^u, the milk resorted to the other,) nor did ever letters and arms so well consist together, it being an accomplished academy of both.

Among the multitude of those new comers, like the clean beasts to the ark when the waters increased, the king (the most excellent intelligent prince of the abilities of his clergy) vouchsafed the doctor the honour of preaching before him in St. Mary's, where, with the like moderation, he laid open the blessings of an accommodation, as being too too sensible, and that so recently, of the virulence and impotent rage, though potent arms, of the disloyal Londoners; which, as the doctor then Christianly thought, could not better be allayed than by a fair condescension in matters of church reformation.

It seems some particulars in that sermon gave offence to some at court, as if the good doctor were a luke-warm royalist, and did not thoroughly own his majesty's cause; which ill-grounded conceit (though he were well satisfied in that his plea for composure) did not a little trouble him: to explain and free himself, an opportunity was wanting both of press and pulpit, and the hurry of the war gave not his prejudiced hearers leisure for his particular vindication. He resolved therefore strenuously to evince his faithful loyalty to the king by another kind of argument; by appearing in the king's armies to be a preacher militant to his soldiers^v.

This resolution Providence was pleased to favour by an honourable friend's recommendation of the doctor to my lord Hopton^{vi}, who was then to choose a chaplain. This ^u He means the university of Cambridge, which was nearly annihilated by the worthless earl of Manchester.

^v The writer of Fuller's life in the Biographia Britannica thinks with very good reason, that during his stay in the university Fuller was for a time entertained at Lan-

coln. Probably about this time also he lost his books and papers, of which he so frequently complains. See particularly his dedication to lord Cranfield in the Church Hist. in p. 1 and other passages quoted in the Biographia ib.

^{vi} Sir Ralph Hopton, created

noble lord, though as courageous and expert a captain, and successful withal, as the king had any, was never averse to an amicable closure of the war upon fair and honourable terms, and did therefore well approve of the doctor and his desires and pursuit after peace. The good doctor was likewise infinitely contented in his attendance on such an excellent personage, whose conspicuous and noted loyalty could not but derive the same reputation to his retainers, especially one so near his conscience as his chaplain, and so wipe off that stain which the mistakes of those men had cast on him. In this intendment God was pleased to succeed the doctor and give him victory (proper to the camp he followed) against this first attempt on his honour.

During the campania, and while the army continued in the field, he performed the duty of his holy function with as much solemn piety and devotion as he used before in places consecrated to God's worship, and according to the form used and appointed by the Church of England: in all emergencies and present enterprises using no other prayers than what the care of the Fathers of the Church had in those miserable exigencies newly directed. To this he added constant preaching on the Lord's day, animating in his sermons the soldiers to fight courageously, and to demean themselves worthy of that glorious cause with which God had honoured them.

With the progress of the war he marched from place to place, and wherever there happened for the better accommodation of the army any reasonable stay, he allotted it with great satisfaction to his beloved studies. Those cessations and intermissions begot in him the most intentness and solicitous industry of mind; which as he never used to much recreation or diversion in times of peace, which might loose and relax a well disciplined spirit, so neither lord Hopton, May 16, 1643, for his victory at Stratton in Cornwall. See his patent in the Worthies, i. 331, and a larger account of him in Lloyd's Memoirs, p. 341. One other such a man had saved king Charles.

I may add that this lord belonged to Lincoln college, and was brought up under the eye of the celebrated Bp. Sanderson, which makes the suggestion stated in the former note still more probable.

did the horror and rigidness of the war stiffen him in such a stupidity (which generally posses all learned men) or else distract him, but that in such lucid intervals he would seriously and fixedly come to himself and his designed business.

Indeed his business and study then was a kind of errantry, having proposed to himself a more exact collection of the worthies general of England, in which others had waded before, but he resolved to go through. In what place soever therefore he came, of remark especially, he spent frequently most of his time in views and researches of their antiquities and church monuments, insinuating himself into the acquaintance (which frequently ended in a lasting friendship) of the learnedest and gravest persons residing within the place, thereby to inform himself fully of those things he thought worthy the commendation of his labours. It is an incredible thing to think what a numerous correspondence the doctor maintained and enjoyed by this means.

Nor did the good doctor ever refuse to light his candle in investigating truth from the meanest person's discovery. He would endure contentedly an hour's or more impertinence from any aged church officer or other superannuated people for the gleaning of two lines to his purpose. And though his spirit was quick and nimble, and all the faculties of his mind ready and answerable to that activity of dispatch, yet in these inquests he would stay and attend those circular rambles till they came to a point; so resolute was he bent to the sifting out of abstruse antiquity. Nor did he ever dismiss any such feeble adjudicators or helpers (as he pleased to style them) without giving them money and cheerful thanks besides.

After the fight at Cheriton Down¹ my lord Hopton drew down with his army and artillery to Basing, and so marched that way to Oxford, intending to take up winter quarters as soon as he had consulted with the king, and left the doctor in that as courageously manned as well fortified house, where he had scarce begun to reduce his marching observations into form and method, but sir William Waller, having taken in Winchester, came to besiege the doctor's sanctuary. This no way amazed or terrified him, but only the noise of the canon playing from the enemy's leaguer interrupted the prosecution of digesting his notes; which trouble he recompensed to them by an importunate spiriting of the defendants in their sallies; which they followed so close and so bravely, suffering the besiegers scarce to eat or sleep, that sir William was compelled to raise his siege and march away, leaving above a thousand men slain behind him, and the doctor the pleasure of seeing that strong effort of rebellion in some way by his means repulsed and defeated, and in being free to proceed in his wonted intendments^a.

¹ On March 29, 1644

What time the doctor continued here is very uncertain; sure we may be he was not an unemployed or an unacceptable guest to that loyal garrison, and that as noble and honourable marquis^b the proprietary of the place; the demolishing of which princely edifice then standing in spite of their potent arms, yet afterwards through the fortune of war being fallen into their hands and razed by their more impotent revenge^c, he doth heartily lament in his "Worthies general^d," preferring it while it flourished for the chiefest fabric in Hampshire. This his kindness to the place of his refuge though no doubt true and deserved enough, yet no questionless was endeared in him by some more peculiar obliging regards and respects he found during his abode there; though indeed his worth could want and miss them nowhere.

The next removal of the doctor was to his charge in the army, and his particular duty of chaplain to his said lord.

^a This happened in the November following.

" 14, in the year 1644, and relieved

" 11 September after, then con" tinue very considerable forces,

" constantly besieging it,—till now

" Cromwell comes." Reign of

Charles I. p. 834.

^b The marquis of Worcester.

" Cromwell comes." Reign of ^c By Cromwell, in Sept. 1645.

Charles I. p. 834.

" Basing house (says Sanderson)

" had been first attempted in Au" gust 1643; again by Waller in " November after; and then with " considerable forces, from June

" capture, however, Fuller seems to " have been at Exeter.

The war was then at its zenith*, hotter and more dilated, raging everywhere both in this and the two neighbouring kingdoms, so that there was no shelter or retirement which it had not invaded and intruded into by unruly garrisons, while the country became a devastated solitude, so that the doctor's design could proceed nowhere.

But that fatal war hastening to a sad and miserable end, success not answering the merit of the cause, the king's field forces being everywhere engaged, and part of the loyal army driven into Cornwall, under the command of that skilful captain, the good doctor took refuge betimes in Exeter, having taken his congé and dismission of his beloved lord[†].

Here again he resumed his task of the aforesaid Worthies, not minding the cloud impending on that place, nor no way intermitting the duty of his calling, preaching constantly to those truly loyal citizens: it is a supernumerary labour to acquaint the reader with how great satisfaction and content; that always and everywhere being annexed to his meanest endeavours.

During his stay in Exeter, the queen having been delivered of her last burthen (saving her sorrows and distresses) by the birth of the princess Henrietta[‡], the learned doctor was preferred to be the infant lady's chaplain; her royal father's intendment being, as he had educated the rest of his princely issue, to have her brought up in the protestant religion. To that end, the good doctor, in regard of his soundness and sincerity in that profession, and eminent famous assertion of it, was designed to attend on

* In 1645.

† Lord Hopton, after leaving Basing house, retired to Oxford; and thence, after collecting recruits, he made a descent upon Taunton, but being compelled to raise the siege upon the approach of the parliamentary forces, he turned his thoughts to the relief of Exeter. At Torrington however he was met by lord Fairfax commanding twice the number of forces, and defeated. Withdrawning into Cornwall, he again raised a body of 3000 horse. But being summoned by Fairfax to surrender at Tresilian bridge, he delivered up his arms, and retired beyond sea. Bullock, p 65, and Lloyd's Mem p 346. Exeter surrendered about the same time, April 13, 1646.

‡ Afterwards duchess of Orleans. See the Worthies, 1 144

her, to instil unto her tender mind (if God had pleased to continue her with safety within the limits of this kingdom) the principles and belief of the English catholic church. This for the present was altogether honorary, and pointed only at his merit, which indeed was as much as the iniquity of those times would afford to any the most deserving personages. But yet the king, to signify his approbation of the doctor's excellent worth by a farther testimony of it, soon afterwards gave him a patent for his presentation to the town of Dorchester in Dorsetshire, a living valued to be worth 400*l. per annum.*

This royal and bounteous favour the doctor modestly declined, continuing his attendance on the princess till the rendition of the city of Exeter to the parliament; notwithstanding the doctor accepted not of that other preferment of Dorchester; for that London was in his eye, as the most necessary and expedient place for finishing his aforesaid book, to which place the expiration of the war promised some kind of access, which since it could not otherwise be, the doctor did gladly submit to.

For general Fairfax, having by treaty reduced and disbanded my lord Hopton's army in Cornwall, came directly back to besiege Exeter, which garrison, upon consideration that no relief could be expected, and that resistance would but defer the resettling of the king and kingdom, (pressed also by the enemy as a cogent argument for their rendition,) having very honourable and comprehensive articles, both for their conscience and estates, delivered up the city to the parliament forces.

In these articles the doctor was included, and by the benefit of them was, without molestation or hinderance, permitted to come to the city of London, where he presently recommenced his laborious enterprise, and by the additional helps of books, the confluence and resort of learned men, his acquaintance, to their fleecing tyrannical courts and committees newly erected, made such a progress, that from thence he could take a fair prospect of his whole work.

Upon his first arrival he came to his own, (the parish of Savoy,) but they received him not, the face of things was so altered; many of his parishioners dead, others removed, all of them generally so overawed by an imperious rabbi of both factions, presbytery and independency, one Mr. Bond^b, formerly a preacher at Exeter, then made by the pretended powers master of the Savoy. The doctor and he having countermarched, and changed ground, wherein different seed was sown of loyal obedience and treasonable sedition, that the doctor might have said of his parish what a learned historian said in another greater case, Parochia in parochia querenda erat.

But a living was not the design of the good doctor, who knew how incompatible the times and his doctrine must needs be. However as oft as he had private opportunities, he ceased not to assert the purity of the church of England, bewailing the sad condition into which the grievous abominable sins of the nation had so far plunged it, as to make it more miserable by bearing so many reproaches and calumnies grounded only upon its calamity. But some glimmering hopes of a settlement and understanding betwixt the king and the pretended houses appearing; the pious doctor betook himself to earnest prayers and petitions to God, that he would please to succeed that blessed work, doing that privately as a christian, which he might not publicly do as a subject, most fervently imploring in those families where his person and devotions were alike acceptable, the blessing of restoration in this afflicted church, and its defenceless defender, the king^c.

That desired affair went on slowly and uncertainly, but so did not the doctor's book, for having recommended the first to the almighty Wisdom, he stood not still expecting the issue, but addressed himself to his study, affording no time but the leisure of his meals, which was short, to the hearing of news, with which the minds and mouths of men

^b John Bond, D. D. of St. John's college, Cambridge, made master of Trinity hall, by the parliamentary faction, at the visitation of that University. He was one of the assembly of divines,

and an assistant to the commissioners for ejecting scandalous and malignant ministers. See Wood's Ath. 1. 379

^c In 1644 See the Church History. vi. 335

were then full employed by the changeableness of the army, who played fast and loose with the king and parliament, till in conclusion they destroyed both.

Then indeed such an amazement struck the loyal pious doctor, when he first heard of that execrable design intended against the king's person, and saw the villany proceed so uncontrollably, that he not only surceased, but resolved to abandon that luckless work (as he was then pleased to call it). For what shall I write, said he, of the worthies of England, when this horrid act will bring such an infamy upon the whole nation, as will ever cloud and darken all its former and suppress its future rising glories?

But when through the seared impiety of those men that parricide was perpetrated, the good doctor deserted not his study alone, but forsook himself too, not caring for or regarding his concerns, (though the doctor was none of the most providential husband, by having store beforehand,) until such time as his prayers, tears and fasting, having better acquainted him with that sad dispensation, he began to revive from that dead pensiveness to which he had so long addicted himself.

He therefore now again renewed his former study, setting about it with unweared diligence. About this time also it happened that the rectory of Waltham Abbey being vacant, and in the disposal of the right honourable earl of Carlisle¹, since deceased, he voluntarily and desirously conferred it on the doctor, and together made him his chaplain, both which he very piously and profitably performed, being highly beloved by that noble lord, and other gentlemen and inhabitants of the parish.

About this time also, many of the orthodox clergy began

¹ James Hay, earl of Carlisle, and baron of Waltham. He was presented to Waltham in 1648, according to the Biographia. To this earl, who died in 1660, Fuller dedicated various pieces. See the Dedication to the History of Waltham, the Pisgah Sight, 237. and this Work, vol. ii. p. 311.

In the Dedication of his Sermon, On Assurance, to sir John Danvers,

he speaks in such a manner, as if he expected to be suspended. That he had at this time no fixed cure, may be inferred from what is stated in the Pisgah Sight, as quoted above; viz. that the earl kindly gave him the living of Waltham, with a more than adequate salary; at that time when he was wandering from place to place.

to appear again in the pulpits of London, through the zeal of some right worthy citizens, who hungered after the true and sincere word, from which they had so long been restrained ; among the chief of whom was our good doctor, being settled lecturer for a time at St. Clement's lane near Lombard street, where he preached every Wednesday in the afternoon, to a very numerous and christian audience ; and shortly after, from thence he was removed to St. Bride's in Fleet street in the same quality of lecturer, the day being changed to Thursday, where he preached with the same efficacy and success¹.

¹ At this time also, he printed his Abel Redivivus, 4to Lond. 1651. Like the Plague Sight, which appeared the year before, it is dated from Waltham Abbey.

It may perhaps seem strange that Fuller should be allowed to pursue his calling unmolested, when the clergy in general were silenced by the tyranny of Cromwell. And it was even objected against him by his opponents as a proof of his want of loyalty and affection to the church. To this he replies in his appeal. " I have endeavoured " he says, " to steer my carriage by the compass " aforesaid, that is, bearing and forbearing ; and my main motive thereunto was, that I might enjoy the benefit of my ministry, the bare using whereof is the greatest advancement I am capable of in this life. I know all stars are not of the same brightness and brightness, some shine, some only twinkle ; and allowing myself of the latter size and sort, I would not willingly put out my own though dim light in total darkness, nor would I burn my half-talent, hoping by putting it forth, to gain another half-talent thereby, to the glory of God and the good of others. But it will be objected against me, that it is suspicious, at the least, that I have buried the tunes with some base compliance with them, because they have reflected so favourably upon me. Otherwise how cometh it to pass, that my breee, like Gideon's, is dry, when the rest of my brethren of the same party, are wet with their own tears ? I bring permitted preaching, and pre-able enjoying of a parsonage.

" I answer, first, I impute this peaceableness I enjoy, to God's undeserved goodness on my un-worthiness. " He hath not dealt thus with all my brethren, above me in all respects. God maketh people sometimes potius reprobare quam inuenire gratiam, to find the favour they sought not for. If I am one of them whom God hath made ' to be pitied of those who carried me away captive,' Ps. cxvi. 46. I hope I shall be thankful unto Him, and others, I hope, will not be envious at me for so great a mercy.

" Next to the fountain of God's goodness, I ascribe my liberty of preaching, to the favour of some great friends God hath raised up for me. It was not a childish answer, though the answer of a child to his father, " taking him with being proud of his new coat. " I am glad said he, but not proud of it. " Give me leave to be glad and joyful in myself, for my good friends, and to desire and endeavour their continuance and increase. " A friend in the court hath always been accounted ' as good as a

The doctor having continued some twelve years a widower, the war finding him so, had the better relished the loss of his first wife, by how much the freer it rendered him of care and trouble for her in those tumultuous times ; so as by degrees it had almost settled in him a persuasion of keeping himself in that state. But now an honourable and advantageous match presenting itself, and being recommended to him by the desires of his noble friends, he consented to the motion, taking to wife one of the sisters of the right honourable the Viscount Baltinglass ; by whom he hath issue one only son, now six years old, a very hopeful youth ; having had by his former wife another son, of the age of twenty-one years or thereabouts, now a hopeful student in Cambridge.

In the year 1655, when the usurping protector had published an interdict against ecclesiastical persons, school-masters and others, who had adhered to his late sacred majesty or assisted the present ; whereby they were prohibited to perform any ministerial office, teach school, &c. upon several pains and forfeitures, the good doctor forbore not to preach as he did before ; the convincing power either of his doctrine or his worth defending and keeping him out of the hands of that unreasonable man.

This unchristian barbarous cruelty of that trial sorely afflicted the good doctor in his first apprehensions of it, though after a little consultation and the encouragement of friends, and the strong persuasions of his own conscience, he came to a resolution to do his duty as a minister of Christ, and leave the issue to God. But he “ penny in the council, or a pound

“ in the purse.”—
“ I must not forget, ‘ The Articles of Exeter,’ whereof I had “ the benefit, living and waiting “ there on the king’s daughter, at “ the rendition thereof : articles, “ which, both as penned and per“ formed, were the best in Eng“ land ;—thanks to their wisdom
“ who so warily made, and honesty “ who so well observed them ! Nor “ was it (though last-named) least “ causal of my quiet, that (happy

“ criticism to myself as I may call “ it !) I never was formally seque“ tered, but went, before driven “ away, from my living ; which “ took off the edge of the ordi“ nance against me, that the weight “ thereof fell but slantingly upon “ me. Thus when God will fasten
“ a favour on any person (though “ never so unworthy) he ordereth
“ the concurrences of all things “ contributive thereunto.” p. 303.

did not only look upon this prohibition in general as a severe punishment inflicted upon the nation, by removing their teachers into corners, nay remote corners of the world, if they disobeyed that edict, but in particular (at first view of it) as some punishment or infliction on himself, as if God had refused him and laid him aside as not fit to serve him ; and this he referred to his former remissness in the discharge of that high function whereunto he was separated and called.

And now did he superabundantly exercise that grace of charity to all persons distressed and ruined by this sad occasion ; what his own small estate could not do, he helped out by exhorting and persuading all men of his acquaintance or congregation, (for so was the church of England reduced, even in that to the form of that schism that ruined it,) or select auditory ; so that what by his powerful example and as strong persuasions, he did minister effectually to their relief.

Not to omit one particular charitable office of this doctor to the same kind of sufferers : from the expiration of the war, he constantly retained one that had been a captain in the royal army, and whose fortunes and condition could neither keep him according to that degree, nor sustain or relieve him in any other. This the good doctor did out of a loyal and honourable sense of such persons' sufferings and contempts far unworthy their cause or their desert : and did therefore allow him 10*l.* yearly besides diet and lodging, till the captain died.

About this time the doctor became chaplain to the right honourable the lord [George] Berkeley¹, having quitted Waltham, in lieu whereof this lord presented him with the living of Cranford in Middlesex² where his body is now deposited. How infinitely well beloved he was ¹ Of this very noble patron, and bountiful protector of the clergy, see the Dedication in the Church Hist. p. 252, and the Appeal of injured Innocence.

² He dates the Appeal from Cranford Moat-house. In 1650 this rectory was returned by the parliamentary juries, at 50*l.* per annum, with 1*l*; acres of glebe. At that time it was held by Mr. Ashford. Fuller was presented March 3, 1652, and was succeeded in it by the celebrated Dr. Wilkins, afterwards bishop of Chester. See Lyon's Environs, p. 27.

there needs not be added to those accumulations of respect he found everywhere, for fear especially of resuscitating the recent grief of those parishioners for his late lamented loss.

He was a little before wooed also to accept of a living at — in Essex, which for some respects he owed the patron, and to employ that rich talent with which God had so bountifully trusted him, he undertook, and piously there continued his labours till his settlement at London ⁿ.

In the interim came out a book of Dr. Heylyn's, called “Animadversions upon Mr. Fuller's Ecclesiastical History,” wherein somewhat tartly (though with that judicious learning for which that doctor is most deservedly honoured) he taxed that book of some errors, &c. To this the doctor replied by a book styled “The Appeal of injured Innocence to the learned and ingenious Reader,” being a very modest, but a most rational and polite defence to the aforesaid exceptions against that elaborate piece. The dispute and controversy was soon ended; the oil the doctor bestowed on this labour being poured into the fresh wound of this quarrel did so assuage the heat of the contest, that it was soon healed into a perfect amicable closure and mutual endearment ^p.

ⁿ He seems to have had two great deliverances from death while he was in this county; for where he is speaking of the saffron in it, which grows so plentifully about the town of Walden, he calls it an admirable cordial; adding, that “under God I owe my life when ‘sick of the small pox to the effi- ‘cacy thereof;’” and Dr. Baldwin Hamey, afterwards knighted, seems to have been his physician in this illness. (Fuller's Worthies in Essex, p. 317, or i. 492. See also his Latin inscription on the copper plate of Jewish idols, to Dr. Hamey in his Pisgah Sight, &c. iv. p. 120. Also his Latin dedication to him in his Church History, f. 138, or i. 365.)

The other deliverance we have also in his own words, where he says: “It is questionable whether ‘the making of gunpowder be ‘more profitable or more dan- ‘gerous, the mills in my parish ‘having been five times blown up ‘within seven years; but blessed ‘be God, without the loss of any ‘one man's life.” (Worthies, p. 319, or i. 495.)

Before he left Essex he made, as we are told, his last will. Biog. Brit. ib. 2061.

^o In 1659.

^p The Church History was printed in 1655. Heylyn's Animadversions in 1659. It was answered by Fuller in his Appeal the same year, and closed by a letter from Dr. Heylyn in his Certainen Epistolare, dated from “Lacie's court in “Abingdon, May 16, 1659.” Alluding to the length of time which

Indeed the grace that was supereminent in the good doctor was charity, both in giving and forgiving; as he had laboured during our civil broils after peace, so when that could not through our sins be attained, did he with the same earnestness press the duty of love, especially among brethren of the same afflicted and too much already divided church; and therefore was most exemplary in keeping the band of it himself, though in a matter that most nearly concerned his credit and fame, the chiefest worldly thing he studied and intended.

This constrained retrospection of the doctor's to secure and assist the far advanced strength of his foremost works, did a little retard and impede the arrear of his labours, which consisted of the flower and choice of all his abilities, and wherein his Worthies were placed; howbeit this proved but a halt to those encumbrances and difficulties which he had all along before met, and soon set that book on foot again⁴.

had elapsed from the publication of the Church History to that of Heylyn's Animadversions. Fuller says: that after some one had told him that Heylyn would probably have answered his book had it not been for his blindness, "not bearing any more for many months after, I conceived myself secure from any wind in that quarter" p. 286.

Respecting this work the author makes the following happy and ingenuous confession in his Appeal, p. 300. "Mothers minding to wean their children use to put root, wormwood, or mustard on the nipples of their breasts. God foresaw I might succ to a surfeit in writing histories which hath been a thief in the lamp of my life, wasting much oil thereof. My head and hand had robbed my heart in such delightful studies. Wherefore he raised the bitter pen of the Animadverter to wean me from such digressions from my vocation. I now experimentally find the truth of Solomon's words: Of making many books there is no end" Ecc. xii. 12. Not but that all perfect books I mean perfect in sheets, otherwise none save scripture perfect have ends in the close thereof, or that any author is so irrational, but he propounds an end to himself before he begins it; but that of making many books there is no end, that is, the writers of them seldom or never do attain that end which they propound to themselves, especially of squinting at sinister ends, as who is not flesh and blood? Such as project wealth to themselves are commonly by unwise managing or casual miscarriage, impaired thereby in their estates. Others who designed to themselves with the builders of Babel to get them a name, commonly meet with shame and disgrace. Or else when their books are ended, yet they are not ended, because though never so cautiously written, some antagonists will take

This was the last remora to it, the doctor going on a smooth swift pace while all things else were retrograde in the kingdom, through the tyrannical plots and stratagems of the usurper Cromwell; so as toward the beginning of that mirabilis annus 1660 he had it ready for the press; to which as soon as the wonders of his majesty's restitution were over, (in the thankful contemplation whereof the good doctor was so piously fixed as nothing else might presume to intrude upon his raise dgladdened spirits,) he brought it, taking the auspicia of that happy and famous juncture of time for the commencement of this everlasting monument of himself, as well as all other English noble deceased persons.

A while before, to complete the doctor's contentment as to his ministry also, he was invited to his former lecturer's place at the Savoy, who even from his departure had suffered under an insufficient or disloyal and malicious clergy; and therefore stood in need of an able and dutiful son of the church to reduce and lead them in the right way and the old paths; for this people (his ancient flock) the doctor had always a more especial respect and kindness, which was the rather heightened in him out of a compassion to their state and condition. Nor did he more tenderly affect them than they universally respect him, receiving him (as indeed he was) as an angel of God, sent to minister unto them heavenly things, in exchange whereof they freely gave him their hearts and hands.

" up the bucklers against them, " I will never meddle more with
 " so that they must begin again " making any more books of this
 " after they have ended, (or sink " nature. It is a provident way
 " in their credits,) to write in their " before writing leaves us to leave " own vindication: which is my " off writing, and the rather be-
 " case, enough to take off my " cause scribbling is the frequen-
 " edge, formerly too keen, in tive thereof.
 " making multiplicity of books.
 " If therefore my petitioning
 " I confess I have yet one His- " and optative Amen shall meet
 " tory [the Worthies] ready for " with God's commissioning and
 " the press, which I hope will be " imperative Amen, I will hereafter
 " for God's glory and honour of " totally attend the concernments
 " our nation. This new built ship " of my calling, and what directly
 " is now on the stocks, ready to " and immediately shall tend to " be launched; and being a vessel " the advance of devotion in my
 " of great burthen, God send me " self and in others, as preparatory
 " some good adventurers to bear " to my dissolution out of this state
 " part of the expense. This done " of mortality."

The doctor, through the injury and iniquity of the times, had for near twenty years been barred of all profits of his prebendaryship of Salisbury,¹ (of which before,) but upon the return of the king, those revenues and possessions, so sacrilegiously alienated from the church, reverted also to their rightful proprietors. This accession and additional help did very much encourage the doctor in the carrying on of his book, which being large would require an able purse to go through with, and he was very solicitous (often presaging he should not live to see it finished, though satisfied of his present healthy constitution)² to have it done out of hand; to which purpose part of the money accruing to him from his Salisbury prebendaryship was designed.

He therefore hastened his book with all expedition; and whereas he had intended to continue it but till 1659, and had therefore writ it in such language as those times of usurpation (during the most part of which it was compiled) would suffer such a subject and concerning matter to be drest in; he now reviewed it over, giving truth and his own most excellent fancy their proper becoming ornaments, scope and clearness. But neither the elevation of the usurpers, nor the depression of the royalists, and the vice versa of it did ever incline or sway him to additions, intercalations, or expunctions of persons, whom he hath recommended for "Worthies;" no such thing as a Pym or Protector, whom the mad world cried up for brave: drops of compassionate tears they did force from him, but his resolute ink was not to be stained by their black actions. A pen full of such would serve to blot out the whole roll of fame.

This constancy of the doctor's to his first model and main of his design doth most evidently argue his firm persuasion and belief of the reviving of the royal cause, since he wrote the most part during those improbable times of any restitution; and he had very ill consulted his own advantage if he had not well consulted the oracles of God.

¹ Alluding to this, he says in his Appeal, "for king Charles' sake I lost none of the worst livings, and one of the best prebends in England."—p. 286

² The passage was unfortunately verified, for the work was not published till 1662, and the doctor died August 16, 1661.

As the last felicity of this doctor's life, he was made chaplain in extraordinary to his majesty, being also in a well grounded expectation of some present further advancement; but here death stept in, and drew the curtain betwixt him and his succeeding ecclesiastical dignities.^t

And would a curtain were drawn here too, that the sad remainder of this task were enjoined to the last trump, when we shall know likewise wherefore God was pleased to take him from us, and be satisfied with his providence! Pity the envious should find such an imperfection in him as death; pity the grateful should mourn so long and so much for the loss of him, and his most incomparable gifts and endowments, without any redress; but—infandos Fullere jubes renovare dolores—we must continue our discourse though upon a discontinued subject, and write the much deplored death of Dr. Fuller.

Having in August returned from Salisbury, whither he went to settle and let his revenue as prebend of that deanery, he returned to his charge at London. It was a very sickly time in the country, the distempers most rife were feverish agues, the disease of which our doctor died; and therefore it was judged, that he had brought the infection of his disease thence, which broke out violently upon him soon after his return, Dr. Nicholas the reverend dean of Paul's dying near the same time upon his coming from the same place. For being desired to preach a marriage sermon on Sunday the twelfth of August to a kinsman of his, who was to be wedded the day after, the good doctor lovingly undertook it; but on that Sunday at dinner felt himself very much indisposed, complaining of a dizziness in

^t At the Restoration Fuller wrote a poem on Charles II., published in the Worthies, iii. 385. At the same time "he was chosen chaplain in extraordinary to his majesty, created doctor of divinity by the king's letters of recommendation to the University of Cambridge, dated August 2, 1660; and so well-grounded was his expectation of higher advancement, that had he lived about a twelvemonth longer, it was thought he would have been made, upon the translation of Dr. Gauden from Exeter to Worcester, on his death soon after, bishop of one of those sees, through the Berkeleys' interest with the queen mother." Biog. Brit. 2065.

his head: whereupon his son intreated him that he would go and lie down on bed, and forbear preaching that afternoon, informing him how dangerous those symptoms were; but the doctor would not be persuaded, but to church he would go, and perform his promise to his friend; saying, he had gone up often into the pulpit sick, but always came down well again, and he hoped he should do as well now through God's strengthening grace.

Being in the pulpit he found himself very ill, so that he was apprehensive of the danger; and therefore before his prayer, addressed himself thus to his congregation: "I find myself very ill, but I am resolved by the grace of God to preach this sermon to you here though it be my last." A sad presage, and more sadly verified!

He proceeded in his prayer and sermon very perfectly, till in the middle (never using himself to notes, other than the beginning word of each head or division) he began to falter, but not so much out, but that he quickly recollected himself, and very pertinently concluded. After he had a while sat down, he was not able to rise again, but was fain to be led down the pulpit stairs by two men into the reading place. He had promised also to christen a child (of a very good friend of his) then in the church, and the parent did earnestly importune him to do it, and the good doctor was as willing as he desiring; but the doctor's son shewing him the extreme danger there was of his father, he desisted from his request.

Much ado there was to persuade the doctor to go home in a sedan; he saying still he should be well by and by, and would go along with them; but at last, finding himself worse and worse, he yielded to go, but not to his old lodgings, (which were convenient to him in the Savoy,) but to his new one in Covent Garden. Being come thither, they had him to bed, and presently sent for Dr. Scarborough,¹

* John, who set forth the Worftheres.

Letters from the Bodleian, u. p. 266.

¹ This sir Charles Scarborough, the favourite pupil of Dr. Harvey, was physician to the duke of York, and an intimate friend of the celebrated Hobbes. Lymon, ib. 24.

but he being in the country Dr. Charlton came, who with the exactest skill and care possible, addressed himself to the recovery of the good doctor. The disease was judged by him to be a malignant fever, such as then raged every where, and was better known by the name of the New disease, which like a plague had swept away a multitude of people throughout the kingdom. Therefore phlebotomy was directed, and some twenty ounces of blood taken from him, and yet nevertheless the paroxysms continued, having totally bereft the doctor of all sense, so much as to give any the least account of his condition ; the physicians now being at a loss, and not able to advise any further against the insuperable violence and force of the distemper.

Yet in this sad and oppressed condition, some comfortable signs and assurances were given by the good doctor, by his frequent lifting up his hands and his eyes ; which devotion ended in the folding of his arms, and sighs fetched questionless from a perfect contrition for this life, and from an earnest desire after and hope of that to come.

Tuesday, August 14. The good doctor gave sad symptoms of a prevailing disease, and Dr. Charlton despaired of his recovery, his fever being so fierce and pertinacious, and which resisted all remedies. As was said almost from the very first decumbency, which was near as soon as he was ill, his senses were seized and surprised, with little or no remission of the distemper, which caused him to talk sometimes, but of nothing more frequently than his books, calling for pen and ink, and telling his sorrowful attendants time vicar of Ilminster, and afterwards rector of Shepton-Mallet in Somersetshire. He was born Feb. 2, 1619, at the latter place, became a commoner of Magdalen-hall, Oxford, in 1635, at which time he was intrusted to the care of the celebrated Dr. Wilkins, afterwards bishop of Chester. By the favour of Charles I. he obtained the degree of doctor in physic, in 1643, being at the same time appointed physician in ordinary to his majesty. When the royal cause declined he retired to London, and pursued his practice, obtaining considerable eminence. In 1689 he was chosen president of the College of Physicians ; and died in 1707. Wood characterises him as "a learned and an unhappy man, aged and grave, yet too much given to romance." Athen. ii. 1112. Among other things he was a great antiquarian, and corresponded with the celebrated Olaus Wormius. See a list of his writings in Wood, ib. Letters from the Bodleian, i. 5. ii. 630.

that by and by he should be well, and would write it out, &c. But on Wednesday noon the presages of a dislodging soul were apparent in him ; for nature being overpowered, the vitals burnt up by such a continual heat ; his lamp of life began to decay, his fever and strength abating together, so that it pleased God to restore to him the use of the faculties of his soul, which he very devoutly and thankfully employed in a Christian preparation for death, earnestly imploring the prayers of some of his reverend brethren with him, who then were sorrowful visitors of him in these his last agonies, which accordingly was performed, the good doctor with all the intentness of piety joining with them, and recommending himself with all humble thankfulness and submission to God's welcome providence Nay, so highly was he affected with God's pleasure concerning him, that he could not endure any person to weep or cry, but would earnestly desire them to restrain, highly extolling and preferring his condition, as a translation to a blessed eternity.

Nor would he therefore endure to hear any thing of the world or worldly matters, for the settling and disposition whereof he had before made no provision, and was desired by some to give some present direction for the better accommodating the several concerns of his family : but the doctor totally rejected any thoughts of those matters, having his mind engaged and prepossessed with things of ravishing and transcendent excellencies. Even his beloved book aforesaid, the darling of his soul, was totally neglected, not a syllable dropping from him in reference to the perfecting and finishing thereof, which he had now brought so near to the birth. Nothing but heaven and the perfections thereof, the consummations of grace in glory, must fill up the room of his capacious soul, which now was flitting and ready to take wing to those mansions of bliss

For on Thursday morning, August 16, 1661, this reverend and painful minister of Christ Jesus, having finished his course, and run the race that was set before him, and fought a good fight, breathed out his wearied spirit into the hands of his Redeemer to his own everlasting fruition and consolation, but to the irreparable loss and very exceeding sorrow of all men, to whom religion, piety, virtue, and supereminent learning were ever acceptable. And whatever the present envious world may think, unprejudiced posterity will undoubtedly erect him a shrine, and pay him those justa of honour and fame, which to his memory most duly and rightly do belong.

After he had laid a while dead, an eruption of blood burst from his temples, which was conjectured to have been long settled there, through too much study, in the methodizing and completing those various pieces in his “Worthies General,” of which he was prophetically afraid he should never live to see the finishing.

He was buried at the desire and at the costs of the right honourable his noble patron the lord Berkeley, at his parish of Cranford in Middlesex, in the chancel of the said church^y, and attended thither by at least two hundred of his brethren of the ministry, such a solemn assembly being scarce to be paralleled, where the reverend dean of Rochester, Dr. Hardy, preached his funeral sermon; being a very elegant and extraordinary pathetical deploration of so great a loss, which hath not yet (though it is hoped and much desired may) passed the press; to which learned piece with all humble submission be referred the praises and commendations of the deceased doctor, being thereby so excellently well transmitted to his everlasting rest.

Though we have now brought this venerable doctor to his repository, and laid him in his silent grave: yet there remain some further offices due to his yet speaking virtues and graces. The smooth and fair track whereof could not be so well insisted on in the foregoing considerations of him, as in via, and that so salebrosa and difficult by the ^y This inscription was placed upon his monument: “ Hic jacet Thomas Fuller, e Collegio Syndeniano in Academia Cantabrigiensi S.S.T.D. hujus Ecclesie rector: ingenii acumine, memorie felicitate, mormi probitate, omnigena doctrina, historia præ-

“ sertim, uti varia ejus summa aquanimitate composita testantur, celeberrimus. Qui dum viros Anglie illustres opere posthumo immortalitati consecrare meditatus est, ipse immortalitatem consecutus est, Aug. 15, 1661.”
Lysons, ib. p. 23.

unevenness and asperity of the times he lived in: but do now orderly lead us without any diversion, as he is in glory, to the pursuit of his fame and memory.

In tendency whereunto it is requisite, to enliven that portrait of him prefixed to this manual, with some of those natural graces which were unexpressible in him by the pencil; withal to shew what a convenient habitation learning and virtue had chosen, in which nothing could be complained of and faulted, but that they took it for so short a term.

He was of stature somewhat tall, exceeding the mean, with a proportionable bigness to become it, but no way inclining to corpulency: of an exact straightness of the whole body, and a perfect symmetry in every part thereof. He was of a sanguine constitution, which beautified his face with a pleasant ruddiness, but of so grave and serious an aspect, that it awed and discountenanced the smiling attractions of that complexion. His head adorned with a comely light-coloured hair, which was so, by nature exactly curled, (an ornament enough of itself in this age to denominate a handsome person, and wherefore all skill and art is used,) but not suffered to overgrow to any length unseeming his modesty and profession.

His gait and walking was very upright and graceful, becoming his well-shapen bulk: approaching something near to that we term majestic; but that the doctor was so well known to be void of any affectation or pride. Nay, so regardless was he of himself in his garb and raiment, in which no doubt his vanity would have appeared, as well as in his stately pace, that it was with some trouble to himself to be either neat or decent; it mattered not for the outside, while he thought himself never too curious and nice in the dresses of his mind.

Very careless also he was to securing mirthanity in the modes of courtship and demeanour, deporting himself much according to the old English grace, which for its ease and simplicity suited very well with the doctor, whose time was designed for more elaborate business; and whose motto might have been, "Simplicity."

As inobservant he was of persons, unless business with them, or his concerns pointed them out and adverted him; seeing and discerning were two things. Often in several places hath he met with gentlemen of his nearest and greatest acquaintance, at a full renounter and stop, whom he hath endeavoured to pass by, not knowing, that is to say, not minding of them, till rectified and recalled by their familiar compellations.

This will not (it may be presumed) and justly cannot be imputed unto any indisposedness and unaptness of his nature, which was so far from rude and untractable, that it may be confidently averred he was the most complacent person in the nation, as his converse and writings, with such a freedom of discourse and quick jocundity of style, do sufficiently evince.

He was a perfect walking library, and those that would find delight in him must turn him; he was to be diverted from his present purpose with some urgency; and when once unfixed and unbent, his mind freed from the incum-bency of his study, no man could be more agreeable to civil and serious mirth, which limits his most heightened fancy never transgressed.

He had the happiness of a very honourable, and that very numerous acquaintance, so that he was no way un-disciplined in the arts of civility; yet he continued semper idem, which constancy made him always acceptable to them.

At his diet he was very sparing and temperate, but yet he allowed himself the repasts and refreshings of two meals a day; but no lover of dainties, or the inventions of cookery; solid meats better fitting his strength of constitution: but from drink very much abstemious, which questionless was the cause of that uninterrupted health he enjoyed till this his first and last sickness. Of which felicity as he himself was partly the cause by his exactness in eating and drinking, so did he the more dread the sudden infliction of any disease, or other violence of nature, fearing this his care might amount to a presumption in the eyes of the great Disposer of all things; and so it pleased God it should happen.

But his great abstinence of all was from sleep; and strange it was, that one of such a fleshy and sanguine composition could overwatch so many heavy propense inclinations to rest. For this in some sort he was beholden to his care in diet aforesaid, (the full vapours of a repletion in the stomach ascending to the brain causing that usual drowsiness we see in many,) but most especially to his continual custom, use, and practice, which had so subdued his nature, that it was wholly governed by his active and industrious mind.

And yet this is a further wonder; he did scarcely allow himself, from his first degree in the university, any recreation or easy exercise, no not so much as walking, but very rare and seldom; and that not upon his own choice, but as being compelled by friendly yet forcible invitations; till such time as the war posted him from place to place, and after that his constant attendance on the press in the edition of his books; when was a question which went the fastest, his head or his feet: so that in effect he was a very stranger, if not an enemy to all pleasure.

Riding was the most pleasant, because his necessary convenience; the doctor's occasions, especially his last work, requiring travel, to which he had so accustomed himself; so that this diversion (like princes' banquets, only to be looked upon by them, not tasted of) was rather made such than enjoyed by him.

So that if there were any felicity or delight which he can be truly said to have had, it was either in his relations or in his works. As to his relations, certainly no man was a more tender, more indulgent a husband and a father. His conjugal love in both matches being equally blessed with the same issue, kept a constant tenor in both marriages, which he so improved, that the harmony of his affections stilled all discord and charmed the noise of passion.

Towards the education of his children he was exceeding careful, allowing them any thing conducing to that end, beyond the present measure of his estate; which it is well hoped will be returned to the memory of so good a father, in their early imitation of him in all those good qualities and literature, to which they have now such an hereditary claim.

As to his books, which we usually call the issue of the brain, he was more than fond, totally abandoning and forsaking all things to follow them. And yet, if correction and severity (so this may be allowed the gravity of the subject) be also the signs of love, a stricter and more careful hand was never used. True it is, they did not grow up without some errors, like the tares: nor can the most refined pieces of any of his antagonists boast of perfection. He that goes an unknown and beaten track in a dubious way, though he may have good directions, yet if in the journey he chance to stray, cannot well be blamed; they have perchance ploughed with his heifer, and been beholden to those authorities, for their exceptions, which he first gave light to.

To his neighbours and friends he behaved himself with that cheerfulness and plainness of affection and respect as deservedly gained him their highest esteem. From the meanest to the highest he omitted nothing what to him belonged in his station, either in a familiar correspondency or necessary visits; never suffering intreaties of that which either it was his duty, or in his power to perform. The quickness of his apprehension, helped by a good nature, presently suggested unto him (without putting them to the trouble of an innuendo) what their several affairs required, in which he would spare no pains; insomuch that it was a piece of absolute prudence to rely upon his advice and assistance. In a word, to his superiors he was dutifully respectful, without ceremony or officiousness; to his equals he was discretely respectful, without neglect or unsociableness; and to his inferiors (whom indeed he judged Christianly none to be) civilly respectful, without pride or disdain.

But all these so eminent virtues, and so sublimed in him, were but as foils to those excellent gifts wherewith God had endued his intellectus. He had a memory of that vast comprehensiveness, that he is deservedly known for the first inventor of that noble art, whereof having left behind him no rules or directions, save only what fell from him in discourse, no further account can be given but a relation of some very rare experiments of it made by him.

He undertook once, in passing to and fro from Temple-bar to the furthest conduit in Cheapside, at his return again, to tell every sign as they stood in order on both sides of the way, repeating them either backward or forward as they should choose, which he exactly did, not missing or misplacing one, to the admiration of those that heard him.¹

The like also would he do in words of different languages, and of hard and difficult prolation, to any number whatsoever. But that which was most strange, and very rare in him, was his way of writing, which, something like the Chinese's, was from the top of the page to the bottom. The manner thus. He would write near the margin the first words of every line down to the foot of the paper: then would he, beginning at the head again, fill up every one of these lines, which, without any interlineations or spaces, but with the full and equal length, would so adjust the sense and matter, and so aptly connex and conjoin the ends and beginnings of the said lines, that he could not do it better, as he hath said, if he had writ all out in a continuation.

The treasury of this happy memory was a very great advantage to his preaching; but being assisted with as rich invention and extraordinary reading, did absolutely complete him for the pulpit. His great stores both of school and case divinity, both of history and philosophy, of arts and tongues, his converse in the scriptures, the fathers and human writings, had so abundantly furnished him, that without the other additaments he had been very eminent among his function. Now all so happily met together, such a constellation could portend no less than some wonder of men, who should be famous in his generation.

¹ At that time, it must be remembered, all shops had their signs

Not to omit to this purpose (however to the first intuition it may seem to the reverend and graver divines a precipitancy, and a venturous rashness in any man with such unprovidedness to step into the pulpit) that this venerable doctor, upon some sudden emergent occasions, upon two hours' warning, and upon a subject of his friend's choice, which was knotty and very difficult, hath performed the task enjoined him with much accurateness; such his art of method, besides that his understanding was strangely opened for the unlocking and opening of scriptures, which he would do very genuinely and evidently, and then embellish his explication with curious variety of expression.

For his ordinary manner of teaching, it was in some kind different from the usual preachers' method of most ministers in those times. For he seldom made any excursions into the handling of common places, or drew his subject matter out at length by any prolixly continued discourse. But the main frame of his public sermons, if not wholly, consisted (after some brief and genuine resolution of the context, and explication of the terms, where need required) of notes and observations, with much variety and great dexterity drawn immediately from the text, and naturally without constraint, issuing or flowing either from the main body, or from the several parts of it, with some useful applications annexed thereunto; which, though either of them long insisted upon, yet were wont with that vivacity to be propounded and pressed by him, as well might, and oft did, pierce deep into the hearts of his hearers, and not only rectify and clear their judgments, but have a powerful work also upon their affections.

Nor was it his manner to quote many scriptures, finding it troublesome to himself, and supposing it would be so to his auditors also; besides deeming it the less needful, in regard that his observations being grounded immediately on the scripture he handled, and by necessary consequence thence deduced, seemed to receive proof sufficient from it.

A constant form of prayer he used, as in his family, so in his public ministry; only varying or adding, upon special occasions, as occurrences intervening required, because not only hesitation (which the good doctor, for all his strength of memory and invention, was afraid of before so awful a presence as the Majesty of heaven) was in prayer more offensive than other discourse, but because such excursions in that duty, in the extempore way, were become the idol of the multitude.

In his Mixed Contemplations read these words: "Let such new practices as are to be brought into our church be for a time candidates and probationers on their good behaviour, to see how the temper of people will fit them, and they fadge with it, before they be publicly enjoined.

" Let them be like St. Paul's deacons, 1 Tim. iii. 10, first be proved, then be used, if found blameless. I cannot therefore but commend the discretion of such statesmen, who knowing the Directory to be but a stranger, and considering the great inclination the generality of our nation had to the Common Prayer, made their temporary act to stand in force but for three years!"

He could as well declare his mind and errand, and of all others likewise with as much plainness, clearness, and (which is more) reverence, as any of those who cried up the Spirit, and their own way, in opposition to the laws and the judgment of antiquity; so to take the people with their newfangled words and licentious easiness of discoursing with God Almighty, whose attributes they squared to their petitions, that it be not said, wills.

As he was an enemy to the inventions of men obtruded upon the blessed Spirit in that irreverent and profane manner of praying and revelation; so was he likewise, on the other side, a professed and avowed adversary to the mass and traditions, which caused him no little slander and obloquy. But the spirit of this pious doctor was exceedingly stirred in him against all popish insinuators; because he was too sensible that through the mad zeal of the vulgar, whom they had by Jesuitical practices inflamed, the house of God in these kingdoms was set in combustion.

¹ Mixed Contemplations on these ² Contemplations on all kinds of Prayers, Times, § 23. Compare also, Me. § 11, 12.

Therefore with much prudence, courage, and boldness, did he everywhere in his books, as occasion offered, unmask the deceits and designs, resist and curb the pride, convince and lay open the errors of the church of Rome ; though he never wrote any thing particularly by way of controversy against it, because, as he said, there was no end of it ; and more than sufficient had already been wrote, if any ingenuity had been in the adherents of that see to have submitted to truth.

Nor was there ever any of that religion who were so hardy as to challenge or tax the doctor but obliquely for any thing wherewith he had charged them, either of apostasy, heresy, or manifest idolatry ; their abuse of antiquity in their rasures and additions, which did very often occur to him in most of his books, from which they were sure to hear of them to the purpose. It much rejoiced the Roman party, when that misunderstanding happened betwixt doctor Heylyn and himself about his Ecclesiastical History, though they caught no fish in those troubled waters. While they tossed their proud billows forward and backward, the protestant cause was safely anchored and moored between them.

And as he never had occasion to engage in any polemical discourse with any of that party, so in these miserable bandyings of our late unhappy times did he always refrain from stickling on any side ; though it was sufficiently known how firmly he was grounded and addict to the true protestant religion, in opposition to the innovations of presbytery and the schism of independency, against whom also he had a zeal, but allayed with a greater compassion than to the papist ; distinguishing betwixt the seducers and the seduced, whom notwithstanding he did very severely deal withal in his writings. One instance whereof take in his Mixed Contemplations : “ I am sad that I may “ add with too much truth, that one man will at last be “ divided in himself, distracted often betwixt many opinions ; that what is reported of Tostatus, lying on his “ deathbed, in multitudine controversiarum non habuit quod crederet ; amongst the multitude of persuasions through

" which he had passed, he knew not where to cast anchor, " and fix himself at last." So that he may be said to have been a right-handed enemy to the stubborn Romanist, and a left-handed one to the cunning sectary.

He was wont to call those controversies concerning episcopacy, and the new-invented arguments against the church of England, with the answers and refutation thereof, hypopothia, things of a day's life, and of no permanency ; the church being built upon a rock, as no storms could shake or move it, so needed it not any defences of art or learning ; being of the same mind with sir Henry Wotton, Disputandi pruritus, scabies ecclesie.

He was wholly conversant during the broils and dissensions of the clergy, in the thoughts and considerations of that text, Let your moderation be known unto all men. on which place he once preached a while before his majesty's restitution to a very great auditory ; little imagining the subsequent words, for the Lord is at hand, were so near the fulfilling in the merciful visitations of God towards these miserable nations.

In this he was the same still, but more solicitous in the glimmering of that happy revolution ; when he plainly saw how indispensably necessary the mutual condescensions of all parties were to the establishment and consolidating of peace. (Mixed Contemplations, to this purpose again.) " Peace in our land, like St Paul at Athens, betwixt two sects of philosophers, is now like to be encountered with two such opposite parties : such as are for the liberties of a commonwealth, and such as are for an absolute monarchy in the full length thereof. But I hope neither of them both are so considerable in their number, parts, and influences on the people, but that the moderate party, advocates for peace, will prevail for the settling thereof." Ibidem. " The episcopal party doth desire and expect that the presbyterian should remit of his rigidity, in order to an expedient between them. The presbyterians require that the episcopal side abate of their authority to advance in accommodation. But some on

¹ Mixed Contemplations on these Times, t. 4

Ibid. t. 35.

“ both sides are so wedded to their wilfulness, stand so stiff
“ on their judgments, are so hot and high in their passions, “ they will not part with the least punctilio in their opin“ ions and practices. Such men’s judgments cannot pre“ tend to the exactness of the Gibeonites, Judges xx. 16,
“ that they hit the mark of [the truth at] an hair’s breadth,
“ and fail not: yet will they not abate an hair’s breadth “ in order to unity; they will take all, but tender nothing; “ make motions with their mouths, but none with their “ feet, for peace, not stirring a step towards it. O that we “ could see some proffers and performances of condescen“ sion on either side, and then let others who remain obsti“ nate be branded with Perez, Gen. xxxviii. 29, the breach “ be upon them.^a”

Thus the good doctor’s bent and resolutions were for a fair and mutual compliance, out of a tender jealousy of this divided church; seeing other men resolved indeed into an obstinate persistance and adherence to their opinions, who would rather rashly cut the Gordian knot of union and concord, to fulfil the doubtful oracles of their own judgment, than leisurely and with patience endeavour the untying of it, which would set the church of God at perfect liberty, and release it from the violence of prejudiced and captivated reason.

How much this lay upon his spirit, being the Benjamin of his love above all other duties and necessities in a Christian conversation or government, may seem further tedious to relate; but because it is so genuine a trait of his elegant pen, and so like him, it is hoped that this excellent feature copied here, in this rude transcript of him, may be of delight (amidst the mass and undigestedness of these collections) to the curious reader.—“ In my father’s time there was a fellow of Trinity college in Cambridge, “ a native of Carleton in Leicestershire, where the people, “ through some occult cause, are troubled with a wharling “ in their throats, so that they cannot plainly pronounce the “ letter R. This scholar, being conscious of his infirmity, “ made a Latin oration of the usual expected length, with-

^a Mixed Contemplations on these Times, §. 19.

" out an R therein: and yet did he not only select words fit
 " for his easy pronunciation, but also as pure and expres" sive for signification; to shew that men might speak with" out being beholden to the dog's letter. Our English
 " pulpits for these last eighteen years have had in them too
 " much caninal anger vented by snapping and snarling
 " spirits on both sides. But if you bite and devour one
 " another, saith the apostle, Gal. v. 15, take heed ye be not
 " devoured one of another. Think not that our sermons
 " must be silent if not satirical, as if divinity did not afford
 " smooth subjects enough to be seasonably insisted on in " this juncture of time. Let us try our skill whether we " cannot preach without any dog letter or biting word; the " art is half learned by intending, and wholly by serious
 " endeavouring of it. I am sure that such soft sermons
 " will be more easy for the tongue of the preacher in pro-
 " nouncing them, less grating to the ears of pious people
 " that hear them, and most edifying to the heart of both
 " speaker and hearer." Again, and for all—" O may
 " the state be pleased so far to reflect on this Isaac, as to " settle the inheritance on him! Let protestant religion
 " be only countenanced by law, be owned and acknowledged
 " for the received religion of the nation. As for other " sects, (the sons of Keturah,) we grudge not that gifts be " bestowed on them. Let them have a toleration, (and " that I assure you is a great gift indeed,) and be per" mitted peaceably, but privately, to enjoy their con-
 " sciences, both in opinions and practices. Such favour " may safely, not to say ought justly, be afforded unto
 " them, so long as they continue peaceably in our Israel,
 " and disturb not the state!""

This is the rather inserted, both for the cautiousness of the expression he used, and which those times required, and by which discrete and amicable way our differences and breaches were likeliest to be made up, the disguises of words to the undecceiving of a misled people into the right way of their felicity, who had all along been driven with speeches, and such like parliament oratory, being

* Mixed Contemplations on these Times, § 20

* Ibid. § 21

the facilest method of introducing that peace which by the same arts was violated. Storms begin from and end in calms ; the gentle breathings of soft and temperate spirits commencing the outrages of other men's violent passions, and terminating and stopping their fury.

This was a charitable and also a reasonable and political design of the doctor, very well applied in the crisis of that distemper ; whose acute pains, in the stripping of those people of their illegal possessions and purchases, (though in time they might and would naturally and centrally return to their just owners,) were to be alleviated and eased by some healing balsam ; not to be lanced and exasperated by the sharp and keen incisions of invectives and exprobriations ; those tumours and swellings of usurped estates being better to be laid by lenitives and suppling oils, than to be eaten away by corrosives, or cut off by cruel instruments.

This policy, more eminent in illustrious persons, (though not the charity of the good doctor,) God succeeded in that juncture of time, by amusing the most considerable persons, as well as the generality of the engaged rebellious faction and party, into a supineness, or (which was the greater work of Providence, that doth commonly go by a method) confident reliance on the king's grace and kindness. Those who would not trust his blessed father, though under confirmation of his royal seal and word, to be further strengthened by their own authority in parliament, were quiet and contented in the only bare expectation what his royal son would promise them.

But the doctor's charity, as before, though so extensive, was far overreached by that liberty of conscience, which interest and self-will and the pride of schism stretched beyond all convenient or reasonable limits ; his condescensions to such as went by the name of tender Christians signifying no more than some acts of grace and pardon lately passed. So that all the good the doctor did in that respect was to himself ; the benefit of that love and charity being returned and multiplied on him to his everlasting comfort.

But what the measure of his charity could not fulfil was made up in his piety and constant intercession, that they might prove such as he in his best thoughts had wished them. He was most earnest in this duty of prayer; and his often accesses to that mercy-seat had made it a place of acquaintance and free reception. As his study importuned him at very unreasonable hours, so it opportunely his devotion in the early and late sacrifices, which he indispensably and firstly offered to the "God of Heaven;" a phrase for its comprehensiveness of the divine Majesty, in the glory and perfection of it above all other his creatures, very familiar and usual with the doctor, by way of emphasis or reverend instance.

If it may pass here without any rigid adversion, a very excellent passage of the doctor's (in the beginning of the anarchy under a commonwealth) would seek admittance, having relation to this duty in hand. Soon after the king's death he preached in a church near London, and a person then in great power, now levelled with his fellows, was present at the sermon. In his prayer before which he said, "God in his due time settle our nation on the true foundation thereof." The then great man demanded of him what he meant by the true foundation? He answered, he was no lawyer nor statesman, and therefore skill in such matters could not be expected from him. But being pressed further to explain himself, whether thereby he did not intend the king, lords, and commons, he answered, that it was a part of his prayer to God, who had more knowledge than he ignorance in all things, that He knew what was the true foundation; and so remitted the factious querist to God's wisdom and goodness.

This was a kind of his experiments in prayer, which were many and very observable; God often answering his desires in kind, and that immediately when he was in some distresses; and God's providence in taking care and providing for him in his whole course of life, wrought in him a firm resolution to depend upon Him, in what condition soever he should be; and he found that providence to continue in that tenour to his last end. Indeed he was wholly possessed with a holy fear of and reliance in God; was conscientiable in his private duties, and in sanctifying the sabbath, being much offended at its profanation by disorderly men; and that both in reference to the glory of God and the scandal brought on the church of England, as if it allowed (as some have impudently affirmed) such wicked licentiousness. For his own particular, very few Sundays there were in the year in which he preached not twice, besides the duties performed in his own house, or in his attendance on those noble persons to whom successively he was chaplain ⁵.

So that if he had not been helped by a more than officious memory, which devoured all the books he read, and digested them to easy nutriment, that supplied all the parts and the whole body of his learning, for his service and furtherance of his labours; it had been impossible but that the duties he performed as a divine must have hindered and justled out those his happy productions as a most complete historian; which study, being tied to the series and catenation of time and truth, could ill brook or break through those avocations, though no doubt it thrived the better under the kindly influence of his devotion.

It will make it also the less wonder why a man of so great merit and such conspicuous worth should never arrive to any eminent honour and dignity or church revenue, save that of a prebend in Salisbury, being also of competent age to become the gravity of such preferments: for he could not afford to seek great matters for himself,

⁵ Of this he gives an apt but homely illustration in his Appeal, p. 287. Speaking of his reluctance to be drawn into controversy, among other motives, he adds, this was one: "I lacked leisure so "lemnly to confute his Animad- "versions, having at this time so "novel and various employment; "the cow was well stocked with "milk, thus praised by the poet: "Bis renit ad mulctrum, binos niti ubere "fetus.

"She suckles two, yet doth not fall,
"Twice a day to come to the pail."
"But I justly feared who twice a
"Lord's day do come to the pul"pit, (God knows my heart, I "speak it not to ostentation,) that "I could not suckle my parish
"and the press, without starving
"or short-feeding of one: whereas
"the Animadverter, in his retired "life, gives no other milk than fol"lowing his own private studies."

who designed his all for the public good and the concerns of his precious soul. Questionless he could not have wanted friends to his advancement, if he would have pursued such ends, who would have been as great furtherers of himself out of a particular affection (which is always ambitious of laying such obligations upon virtue,) to his person, as they had assisted him in his works and labours.

He was reward and recompence enough to himself; and for his fame and glory certainly he computed it the best way; it is the jewel that graces the ring, not so the contrary High places are levelled in death, and crumble into dust, leaving no impression of those that possessed them, and are only retrievable to posterity by some excellent portraits of their nobler parts; wherein it will on all hands be confessed the doctor hath absolutely drawn himself beyond the excellentest counterfeit of art, and which shall outlive all addition of monument, and outflourish the pomp of the lastingest sepulchral glory.

But had the worthy doctor but some longer while survived, to the fruition of that quiet and settlement of the church, of which by God's goodness and favour we have so full a prospect, and that the crowd of suitors for ecclesiastical promotions had left thronging and importuning their great friends, to the stifling and smothering of modest merit, it may be presumed the royal bounty would favourably have reflected on and respected that worth of the doctor, (which was so little set by and regarded of himself in his contented obscurity,) by a convenient placing and raising of that light to some higher orb, from whence he should have dilated and dispensed his salutiferous rays and influences.

Some little time after his death his course would have come to have preached before his majesty, for which the doctor made preparations; and that most probably would have proved a fit opportunity of notifying himself to the king, whose most judicious and exact observation the remarks of the doctor's learned preaching would have happily suited. This honour was designed him before by a right noble lord, in whose retinue as chaplain he went over to the Hague, at the reduction of his majesty into these his kingdoms. But the haste and dispatch which that great affair required in the necessity of the king's presence here, afforded him not the effect of that honourable intendment. But what he was disappointed of here is fully attained by his happy appearance before the King of kings, to praise and magnify him, and to sing hallelujahs for ever.

So adieu to that glory of the doctor, which is incommutable with the world; and are and all prosperity be to those his remains, which he hath to the general advantage of learning and piety most liberally imparted!

Too customary were it to recite the several kinds and sorts of honourable epithets which his equal readers have fixed on him; but this under favour may be assigned peculiarly to him, that no man performed any thing of such difficulty as his undertakings with that delight and profit, which were as the gemelli and twins of his hard labour, and superfetations of wit, not distinguishable but by the thread of his own art, which clued men into their several and distinct apartments.

And so impertinent it will be to engage further in a particular account of his books, whose sure and perpetual duration needs not the minutes of this biography, especially that his ultimate piece, and partly posthumous, (his often mentioned book, the Worthies General of England,) whose design was drawn by eternity; commencing from their (before) unknown originals, and leading into an ocean of new discoveries. And may some happy as hardy pen attempt the continuation!

[The following List of FULLER's WORKS is with some alterations taken from Lourdes's Bibliographer's Manual.]

Those marked with an asterisk are not enumerated in the List.

1. David's bainous Sinne, heartie Repentance, hevie Punishment. London, 1631, 12mo.
- * 2. The Life of Dean Colet, prefixed to his Dayly Devotions 1635, 12mo.
3. The Historie of the Holy Warre. Camb. 1639, fol.
[This work passed through various editions in the years 1640, 1641, 1647, 1651, 1652.]
4. The Holy and Profane State. Camb. 1643, fol.
[This work passed through various editions, and is generally found with the foregoing, &c. 1647, 1648, 1651, 1652, 1658, 1663.]
5. Joseph's party-coloured Coat; a comment on part of 1 Corinith. II. together with eight Sermons. London, 1640, 1649, 4to.
6. A fast Sermon preached on Innocents' Day. Matt. v. 9 London, 1642, 4to.; and 1654, 12mo.
7. A Sermon of Reformation, preached at the Church of the Savoy, July 27, 1643. London, 1643, 4to.
[Reprinted in the answer to Saltmarsh.]
8. Truth Maintained; or Positions delivered in a Sermon at the Savoy, asserted for Sacred and Safe. Oxf. 1643, 4to.
[An answer to Saltmarsh.]
9. A Sermon preached at S. Peter's Westminster, on the 27th of March, being the day of His Majesty's inauguration — 2 Sam v. 19, 20. London, 1643, 4to., and 1654, 12mo.
10. Good Thoughts in Bad Times. Exeter, 1643, 12mo London, 1646. Since, at various times in London
11. Good Thoughts in Worse Times. London, 1642, 16mo and 1647, 12mo.

12. Good Thoughts in Bad Times, together with Good Thoughts in Worse Times. Lond. 1649, 1652, 1669, 1680. Since lately at London.
13. Cause and Cure of a Wounded Conscience. Lond. 1646, 1649, 12mo.; 1810, 18mo.
- * 14. Fear of losing the Old Light; a Sermon preached at Exeter. Lond. 1646, 4to.
15. Andronicus; or the Unfortunate Politician. Lond. 1646, 12mo.; and 1649.
- * 16. The Just Man's Funeral; a Sermon preached at Chelsea, on Eccles. vii. 15. Lond. 1649, 4to.
17. The Pisgah Sight of Palestine. Lond. 1650, fol.; 1652, 1662.
18. Abel Redivivus. Lond. 1651, 4to.; and 1652.
19. Comment on Christ's Temptation, Matt. iv. 1—11. 1652, 8vo.
20. The Infant's Advocate. Lond. 1653, 8vo.
- * 21. Perfection and Peace; a Sermon. Lond. 1653. 8vo.
22. A Comment on Ruth; together with two Sermons; the one teaching to Live Well, the other to Die Well. Lond. 1654, 8vo.
23. Ornitho-logie; or the Speech of Birds; also the Speech of Flowers; partly moral, partly mystical. Lond. 1663, 12mo.; and both separately in 1655.
- * 24. Ephemeris Parliamentaria; or a faithful Register of the Transactions in Parliament, 1627—28. Lond. 1654, fol.
25. A Triple Reconciler. Lond. 1654, 8vo.
26. The Church History. Lond. 1655—6, fol. (With this Fuller published
The History of the University of Cambridge; and
The History of Waltham Abbey.)
27. Life out of Death; a Sermon preached at Chelsea. Lond. 1655, 8vo.
28. *A Collection of Sermons: 1. The best Employment.
2. A Gift for God alone. 3. The true Penitent. 4. The best Act of Oblivion; together with Notes upon Jonah.* Lond. 1656, 8vo.

29. A Sermon [on Acts xiii. 36.] at the Funeral of G. Heycock. Lond. 1657. 4to.
(In the M.R. Part of the B. M. Catalogue.)

29. The best Name on Earth; with other Sermons. Lond. 1657, 1659. 8vo.

30. Mixed Contemplations in Better Times. Lond. 1660. 8vo

31. The Appeal of Injured Innocence. Lond. 1659. fol

32. History of the Worthies of England. Lond. 1662. fol.

* 33. Several Sermons in Peatley's House of Mourning

* 34. The Life of Henry Smith, prefixed to his Sermons, a Preface to Holdsworth's Valley of Vision; and to Spencer's Things New and Old; a novel entitled Triana, published in 1662, but upon what authority this latter work is attributed to Fuller I have not been able to discover.

At the end of his Life, in the List of his Works, are mentioned the following :

1. A Sermon on Assurance.
2. A Latin treatise, De Ecclesia.

THE CHURCH-HISTORY
OF BRITAIN;
From the Birth of JESUS CHRIST,

Untill the YEAR

M. D C. XLVIII.

ENDEAVOURED
By THOMAS FULLER.

London,

Printed for JOHN WILLIAMS at the signe of the Crown in St. Paul's Church-yard, Anno 1655.

TO THE ILLUSTRIOUS
E S M E S T U A R T, DUKE OF RICHMOND.^a

I HAVE sometimes solitarily pleased myself with the perusing and comparing of two places of scripture: Acts xxii. 22. the wicked Jews said of St. Paul, Away with such a fellow from ^a [Son of James Stewart, third duke of Richmond; one too well known, to require a detailed notice here. In the offers of accommodation set on foot in the year 1642, he was one of those who were excepted against by the parliament, for no other reason, than for "his duty and reverence for the king and the church." See Clarendon, III. 239. I. 215. thousand pounds together; and as soon as the war begun, engaged his three brothers, all gallant gentlemen, in the service, in which they all lost their lives. Himself lived with unspotted fidelity some years after the murder of his master, and was suffered to put him into his grave; and died without the comfort of seeing the resurrection of the crown." Ib. 540.

"As he had received great bounties from the king," says the same historian, "so he sacrificed all he had to his service, as soon as his occasions stood in need of it; and lent his majesty, at one time, twenty

the earth; for it is not fit that he should live: Hebrews xi. 38, St. Paul said of the godly Jews, Of whom the world was not worthy. Here I perceive heaven and hell, mercy and malice, God's spirit and man's spite, resolved on the question, that it is not fit that good men should live long on earth.

However, though the building be the same, yet the bottom is different; the same conclusion being inferred from opposite, yea contrary premises. Wicked men think this world too good. God knows it too bad for his servants to live in. Henceforward I shall not wonder that good men die so soon, but that they live so long: seeing wicked men desire their room here on earth, and God their company in heaven. No wonder then, if your good Father was so soon translated to happiness, and his Grace advanced into glory.

He was pleased to give me a text some weeks before his death, of the words of our Saviour to the probationer convert: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God, that is, as the words there import, from the state of salvation. But before my sermon could be, his life was finished, and he, in the real acception thereof, possessed of heaven and happiness.

Thus was I disappointed (O that this were the greatest loss by the death of so worthy person!) of a patron, to whom I intended the dedication of this first part of my History.

I after was entered on a resolution to dedicate it to his memory; presuming to defend the innocence and harmlessness of such a dedication, by precedents of unquestioned antiquity. But I intended also to surround the pages of the dedication with black, not improper, as to his relation, so expressive of the present sad condition of our distracted Church.

But seasonably remembering how the altar ED (only erected for commemoration,) ^bwas misinterpreted by the other tribes for superstition; I conceived it best to cut off all occasions of cavil from captious persons, and dedicate it to you his son and heir.

Let not your Grace be offended, that I make you a patron at the second hand: for though I confess you are my refuge, in relation to your deceased Father; you are my choice, in reference to the surviving nobility. God sanctify your tender years with true grace, that in time you may be a comfort to your Mother, credit to your kindred, and honour to your nation.

^b Joshua xxii. 11.

Your Grace's most bounden

Orator,

THOMAS FULLER.

TO

T H E R E A D E R.

A N ingenious gentleman some months since in jest-earnest, advised me to make haste with my History of the Church of England, for fear (said he) lest the Church of England be ended before the History thereof.

This History is now, though late, (all church-work is slow,) brought with much difficulty to an end.

And blessed be God, the Church of England is still (and long may it be) in being, though disturbed, distempered, distracted; God help and heal her most sad condition.

The three first books of this volume were for the main written in the reign of the late king, as appeareth by the passages then proper for the government. The other nine books we made since monarchy was turned into a state.

May God alone have the glory, and the ingenuous Reader the benefit of my endeavours;
which is the hearty desire of

Thy Servant in Jesus Christ,

THOMAS FULLER.

From my Chamber in Sion College.

THE CHURCH HISTORY OF BRITAIN.

CENTURY I^a.

HAT we may the more freely and fully A. D. 37.
pay the tribute of our thanks to God's The doleful case of the pagan Britons.
goodness, for the gospel which we now enjoy, let us recount the sad condition of the Britons our predecessors, before the Christian faith was preached unto them: At that time they were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world^b. They were foul idolaters, who, from mis-applying that undeniable truth of God's being in every thing, made every thing to be their god, trees, rivers, hills, and mountains. They worshipped devils, whose pictures remained in the days of Gildas^c,

[^a For this account of the introduction of Christianity into Britain, Fuller is greatly indebted to Usher's celebrated work, "Britannicarum Eccle-"siarum Antiquitates." The first edition of this book was published in Dublin, 1639, in 4to, and the second in London, 1687, fol. with additions, and a slight variation in the title page. I have retained the paging of both editions. Stil-lingfleet's work on the same subject, "The Antiquities of the "British Churches," displays considerable learning, and is superior to Usher's in critical skill;

rejecting at once the fabulous legends of Galfridus Arthurus, the Glastonbury chronicle, and writers of a similar stamp.]

[^b Eph. ii. 12.]

[^c Hist. c. ii. p. 2. ed. Gale.

A. D. 37. within and without the decayed walls of their cities, drawn with deformed faces, (no doubt, done to the life, according to their terrible apparitions,) so that such ugly shapes did not woo, but fright people into adoration of them. Wherefore, if any find in Tully that the Britons in his time had no pictures, understand him, they were not artists in that mystery, (like the Greeks and Romans,) they had not pieces of proportion, being rather daubers than drawers, stainers than painters, though called picti from their self-discoloration.

Their principal idols. 2. Three paramount idols they worshipped above all the rest, and ascribed divine honour unto them:

1. Apollo, by them styled Belinus the Great.
2. Andraste, or Andate^d, the goddess of victory.
3. Diana, goddess of the game.

This last was most especially reverenced, Britain being then all a forest, where hunting was not the recreation but the calling, and venison, not the dainties but the diet of common people. There is a place near St. Paul's in London, called in old records Diana's Chamber^e, where, in the days of King Ed-

^d Dion. Cassius, lxii. 7.

^e Fuller in his "Appeal, &c." p. 52, adds the following observation on this passage: "Let me add this passage from the pen of as great an antiquary, as any Wales now doth enjoy.

"As for the name of Diana, I do conceive that she was called Dain in our language, and I have many histories of our nation, that seem to make no question of it. To this day in Wales, fat marketable

"cattle are called, Gwarcheg "Drinal; that is to say, "Diana's cattle, or, cattle fit "to be sacrificed, &c. And I "am more than confident, "there is no man living can "put any other interpretation "upon this word Drinal. It "must be an adjective of Dain; "and Dain hath no other signification in our language than "the name of Diana." This antiquary was the celebrated H. Lhuid.)

ward the First^f, thousands of the heads of oxen were A. D. 37. digged up, whereat the ignorant wondered, whilst the learned well understood them to be the proper sacrifices to Diana, whose great temple was built thereabout. This rendereth their conceit not altogether unlikely, who will have London so called from Llan-Dian^g, which signifieth in British “the temple “of Diana.” And surely conjectures, if mannerly observing their distance, and not impudently intruding themselves for certainties, deserve, if not to be received, to be considered. Besides these specified, they had other portenta diabolica, pene numero Ægyptiaca vincentia^h: as indeed they who erroneously conceive one God too little, will find two too

^f Camden's Britann. in Middlesex, p. 306, ed. 1607.

[^g The author of this “conceit” is the celebrated Selden. It was cavilled at by Dr. Heylyn, who imagines, that if this supposition were correct, “the Welch being so tenacious of their ancient language would have had some remembrance of it, who to this day call it Lunday, and not Llan-dian,” &c. Examen Hist. p. 3. The passage from Selden is quoted by Fuller in reply: “This learned antiquary,” he says, “after he had alleged some verses out of Robert of Gloucester, deriving the name of London, quasi Lud's town, from Lud, pro ceedeth as followeth, in his notes on the eighth song in Polyolbion, p. 126. ‘Judicious reformers of fabulous report, I know, have more serious derivations of the name; and seeing conjecture is free, I could imagine it “ might be called at first Lhan-“ dien, i. e. ‘the Temple of “ Diana,’ as Lhan-Dewi, Lhan-“ stephan, Lhan-padern vaur, “ Lhan-vair, i. e. ‘S. Dewys, “ S. Stephans, S. Patern the “ Great, S. Mary, (and Veru-“ lam is by H. Lhuid derived “ from Ver-Lhan, i. e. ‘the “ church upon the river Ver’) “ with divers more such places “ in Wales; and so afterwards “ by strangers turned into Lon-“ dinum, and the like. For “ that Diana and her brother “ Apollo, under the name of “ Belin, were two great deities “ amongst the Britons.” “ Ap-“ peal,” &c. p. 53. For further remarks upon this subject, see Stow's Survey, (by Strype,) vol. i. p. 5. Carte has dedicated many pages in the commencement of his history to this subject, and has collected from ancient authors all that can serve to illustrate it.]

^h Gildas, ib.

A.D. 37. many, and yet millions not enough. As for those learned pens, which report that the Druids did instruct the ancient Britons in the knowledge and worship of one only God¹; may their mistake herein be as freely forgiven them, as I hope and desire that the charitable reader, will with his pardon meet those involuntary errors, which in this work by me shall be committed.

9. Two sorts of people were most honoured amongst the Britons:

1. Druids, who were their	 philosophers, divines,   lawyers, prophets,   poets, historians.
2. Bards, who were their

The office and employment of the Druids.

The former were so called from drūs, signifying generally a tree, and properly an oak, under which they used to perform their rites and ceremonies. An idolatry whereof the Jews themselves had been guilty, for which the prophet threateneth them: They shall be ashamed of the oaks which they have desired. But the signal oak which the Druids made choice of was such a one on which mistletoe did grow; by which privy token they conceived God marked it out as of sovereign virtue for his service. Under this tree, on the sixth day of the moon, (whereon they began their year,) they invocated their idols, and offered two white bulls filleted in the horns, with many other ceremonies. These pagan priests never wrote any thing, so to procure the greater

¹ Druides unum esse Deum De Pries p. 16. ed Camb. 1743.
sempiter inculcarunt Camden's ¹ Isai. i. 29.
Britan. p. 47. ed 1607. Godwin. ¹ Pliny, Nat. Hist. xvi. 44.

veneration to their mysteries ; men being bound to A. D. 37.
believe that it was some great treasure which was locked up in such great secrecy¹.

4. The bards^m were next the Druids in regard, and The powerful practices of the bards on the people.
played excellently to their songs on their harps ; whereby they had great operation on the vulgar, surprising them into civility unawares, they greedily swallowing whatsoever was sweetened with music. These also, to preserve their ancestors from corruption, embalmed their memories in rhyming verses, which looked both backward in their relations, and forward in their predictions : so that their confidence meeting with the credulity of others, advanced their wild conjectures to the reputation of prophecies. The immortality of the soul they did not flatly deny, but falsely believe, disguised under the opinion of transanimation, conceiving that dying men's souls afterwards passed into other bodies, either preferred to better, or condemned to worse, according to their former good or ill behaviour. This made them contemn death, and always maintain erected resolutions, counting a valiant death the best of bargains, wherein

[^l Another etymology of the word is given by Carte in his Hist. of Engl. vol. i. 28. with a learned dissertation upon the character and discipline of the Druids. It is not improbable that they believed in one supreme God, but corrupted his worship by adoration paid to subordinate deities ; to whom, after the fashion of other nations, they attributed a partial and a local influence. The reason of their committing their mysteries to verse and not to writing, was perhaps not so much their ignorance of letters and want of materials, as the great facility which verse afforded the memory ; and such is the mode in which the memorials of the early religious rites of all pagan nations were preserved. See also Heylyn's remarks in the "Appeal," &c. p. 54.]

[^m The Bards were not a class distinct from the Druids ; but one of their order, to whom the duties mentioned by our author were assigned. See Carte, i. 71.]

A.D. 37. they did not lose, but lay out their lives to advantage. Generally they were great magicians, immuch that Pliny saith^a, that the very Persians, in some sort, might seem to have learnt their magic from the Britons.

The first preaching of the gospel in Britannia.

5. So pitiful for the present, and more fearful for the future, was the condition of the heathen Britons, when it pleased God with a strong hand and stretched out arm, to reach the gospel unto them who were afar off, both in local and theological distance. This was performed in the latter end of the reign of Tiberius, some thirty-seven years after Christ's birth, as Polidor Virgil collecteth out of the testimony of Gildas^b.

Causes which hastened the conversion of Britain, before other kingdoms which lay sooner to Palestine.

6. If it seem incredible to any, that this island, furthest from the sun, should see light with the first, whilst many countries on the continent interposed, (nearer in situation to Judaea, the fountain of the gospel,) sat as yet, and many years after, in darkness and in the shadow of death; let us consider, first, that Britain being a by-corner, out of the road of the world, seemed the safest sanctuary from persecution, which might invite preachers to come the sooner into it. Secondly, it facilitated the entrance of the gospel hither, that lately the Roman conquest had in part civilized the south of this island, by transporting of colonies thither, and erecting of cities theret^c; so that, by the intercourse of traffick and commerce with other countries, Christianity had the more speedy and convenient waftage over. Whereas on the other side, this set the conversion of Germany so backward, because the inland parts thereof enter-

^a Nat. Hist. xxx. 1.

^b Tempore (ut scimus) sum mo Tiberii Caesaris. [Gildas. p. 55.]

^c vi. p. 3

^d [See the "Appeal," &c.

tained no trading with others; and (out of defiance A.D. 37. to the Romans) hugged their own barbarism, made lovely with liberty, bolting out all civility from themselves, as jealous that it would usher in subjection. Lastly and chiefly, God in a more peculiar manner did always favour the islands, as under his immediate protection. For as he daily walls them with his Providence, against the scaling of the swelling surges, and constant battery of the tide; so he made a particular promise of his gospel unto them by the mouth of his prophet, I will send those that escape of them to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame^q. To shew that neither height nor depth (no not of the ocean itself) is able to separate any from the love of God. And for the same purpose Christ employed fishermen for the first preachers of the gospel, as who being acquainted with the water and mysteries of sailing, would with the more delight undertake long sea voyages into foreign countries.

7. But now, who it was that first brought over the St. Peter gospel into Britain is very uncertain. The Con- ^{falsely re-} ^{ported to} ^{have} ^{preached in} ^{Britain.} versioner (understand Parsons the Jesuit) mainly stickleth for the apostle Peter to have first preach- ed the gospel here^r. Yea, when protestants object against St. Peter's being at Rome, because St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, omitteth to name or

^q Isai. lxvi. 19. [De Lyra in his commentary upon Ps. xcvi. 1. applies the multitude of the isles to Great Britain and Ireland; and Usher seems to approve of this interpretation. See Brit. Eccl. Ant. p. 2. The Vulgate is more expressive than our version: "Mittam ex eis ad

"gentes in Oceano insulasque
"remotissimas quæ non audi-
"verant famam meam neque
"viderant gloriam meam," &c.
The latter words seem to support De Lyra's interpretation.]

^r Parsons' Three Conversions, i. 19.

A.D. 37. salute him, the Jesuit handsomely answers, that Peter was then probably from home, employed in preaching in Britain and other places. His arguments to prove it are not so strong but that they easily accept of answers, as followeth:

1. Arg. St. Peter preached in Britain, because Gildas¹ speaking against his dissolute countrymen, taxeth them for usurping the seat of Peter with their unclean feet.

Answe. Understand him, that they had abused the profession of the ministry: for it follows, "they have sitten in the pestilent chair of Judas the traitor." Whence it appears both are meant mystically and metaphorically, parallel to the expressions of the apostle Jude, v. 11. They have gone in the way of Cain, &c.

2. Arg. Simeon Metaphrastes saith so², that he stayed some days in Britain, where having preached the word, established churches, ordained bishops,

¹ In Epist. de Excid. Brit. p. 23, ed. Gale. [See the "Appeal," &c. p. 57.]

² Comment. de Petro et Paulo ad diem 29 Junii. [chap. iii. p. 416. ed. Bolland.]

A translation of this treatise appears to have been first published by Surinus, "De prob. Sanctorum Historiis," Vol. III. 850. = 272. ad diem 29 Junii, who attributes it to Simeon Metaphrastes. But the Bollandists, who have printed the original Greek, following Leo Allatius, have rightly rejected the name of Simeon; for, as Allatius observes, "viri de antiquitate ecclesiastica bene meriti vitas sanctorum quar-

" auctorem sibi præfixum non
" præferunt, omnes non sine
" erroris atque incertitudo nota
" Simeoni vindicarunt, quo
" vere Simeonis non erat."
The remark of the Bollandists upon this passage supports, if such support be indeed necessary, the criticism of Fuller.
" Quia vero auctor dicti Com-
" mentarii præfatur se ex ra-
" mis collegiis, quo de SS. Pe" tro et Paulo dicit, atque in" terim diversis temporibus acta
" parum congrue in unum idem-
" que tempus compingit, ideo
" et propter alia opulenta ab
" eodem commissa arbitramur
" potius alium sume a Meta" phraste." Junii t. V. 400 B.)

priests, and deacons, in the twelfth year of Nero he A. D. 37.
returned to Rome.

Ans. Metaphrastes is an author of no credit, as Baronius himself doth confess^u.

3. Arg. Innocent the First reporteth, that the first churches in Italy, France, Spain, Africa, Sicily, and the interjacent islands, were founded by St. Peter^x.

Ans. Make the map an umpire, and the epithet interjacent will not reach Britain, intending only the islands in the midland sea.

4. Arg. Gulielmus Eysingrenius saith so^y.

Ans. Though he hath a long name he is but a late author, setting forth his book anno 1566^z. Besides, he builds on the authority of Metaphrastes, and so both fall together.

5. Arg. St. Peter himself in a vision, in the days of king Edward the Confessor, reported that he had preached the word in Britain.

Ans. To this vision pretended of Peter, we oppose the certain words of St. Paul, 1 Tim. i. 4. Neither gire heed to fables.

We have stayed the longer in confuting these u In aliis multis ibi a se positis errare eum certum est. Ecc. Annal. in an. 44. §. 54. [Vol. i. p. 306. ed. Mansi. See a more favourable judgment of Metaphrastes in Weismann's Hist. Eccl. N. T. i. 837. Also Heylyn's Examen Hist. p. 8.]

^x Epistola 1. ad Decentium. [in Concil. ii. 1245. ed. Labbe et Coss. 1671.

The words of Innocent are these: "Quis enim nesciat "aut non advertat id quod "a principe apostolorum Petro "Romanæ ecclesiæ traditum "est, ac nunc usque custodi-

"tur, ab omnibus debere ser-
"vari, nec superinduci aut intro-
"duci aliquid, quod aut auctori-
"tatem non habeat, aut aliunde
"accipere videatur exemplum?
"præsertim cum sit manifes-
"tum in omnem Italiam, Gal-
"lias, Hispanias, Africam at-
"que Siciliam, insulasque in-
"terjacentes, nullum instituisse
"ecclesias, nisi eos quos vene-
"rabilis apostolus Petrus aut
"eius successores constituerint
"sacerdotes?"]
[y fol. ccxxii. b.]
^z Mason de Minist. Ang. ii.
2. p. 65. ed. 1625.

A. D. 37. arguments, because from Peter's preaching here, Parsons would infer an obligation of this island to the see of Rome, which how strongly he hath proved let the reader judge. He that will give a cap, and make a leg in thanks for a favour he never received, deserueth rather to be blamed for want of wit, than to be praised for store of manuers. None therefore can justly tax us of ingratitude, if we be loath to confess an engagement to Rome more than is due. The rather because Rome is of so tyrannical a disposition, that making herself the mother-church, she expects of her daughters not only dutifullness, but servility; and (not content to have them ask her blessing, but also do her drudgery) endeavoureth to make slaves of all her children.

8. Passing by Peter, proceed we to the rest of the apostles, whom several authors allege the first planters of religion in this island.

A. D. 41.
St. James.

² Isidorus Hispal. de patribus utriusque Testament. c. 72.
[p. 365. ed. Du Breul, 1617.]
Flavius Lucius Dexter in Chronico ad annum 41. [p. 77.
ed. 1627.]

St. Isidore states nothing as to the preaching of St. James in Britain. His words are, "Jacobus filius Zebedaei frater Johannis, quartus in ordine xii., tribubus que sunt in dispersione gentium scripsit, atque Hispaniar et occidentalium locorum populis evangelium predicavit et in occasu mundi lucem predicationis infudit." It is even doubtful whether these are the words of Isidore himself. See

Du Breul, p. 610. P. For this treatise of Isidore is almost entirely extracted from a Martyrology of St. Jerome, according to L'aber. ibid. 8.]

Dexter's Chronicle is attributed by Placcius to P. Bavarus its editor and commentator. For a long time this chronicle was supposed to have been lost; when suddenly, at the close of the 16th century, a report was circulated by a Spanish Jesuit, Hieron. Roman de Higuera, that he had discovered the MS. But the book is of no credit. Dionysius Petavius, in his epistle to Ronweide, (Ep. ii. 26.) styles it the clumsy forgery of some Spanish rogue, "Hom-ut if we consult with the scripture, we A.D. 41.

 that the sword of Herod put an end to all St. Paul, St. Simon, and St. Aristobulus, preachers in Britain.
 s before the apostles their general deparl Jerusalem^b. Indeed this James is noported (how truly, let them seek who are

l) to have been in Spain; and it is pro-ie, mistaking Hibernia for Hiberia, and then ing Hibernia, a British island, with our Bri-one error is very procreative of another,) - beginning to James his preaching here.

Paul is by others shipped over into our island,
 whom, thus sings Venantius Fortunatus^c:

et oceanum, vel qua facit insula portum,
 ne Britannus habet terras atque ultima Thule.

credit is to be given to Britannus, because in company with ultima Thule, which being expression of poets for the utmost bounden known world, seems to savour more of hyperbole than historical truth, as a phrase a only to express far foreign countries.

on the Canaanite, surnamed Zelotes; and A.D. 47.
 he brook his name, the fervency of whose led him into so far and cold a country to the gospel. Dorotheus makes him to be tyred and buried in Britain^d. But this, eritissimi ψευδεπιib Hispano aliquo confictum;" and s the author "ille

 ii Lucii Dextri lar-it." Brit. Eccl. Ant.
 also Fabricius, Bib.
 it. IV. p. 25.]
 her, Brit. Eccl. Ant.

de vita S. Martini.

[Bib. Max. PP. Vol. x. p. 607.
 H. ed. 1677. These lines are somewhat different in Usher.
 Ib. p. 4.]

[d] In which Dorotheus is supported by Nicephorus, Hist.
 Eccl. ii. 40. and by some of the Greek Mænologia for the 10th of May. See Usher, ib. 4. The treatise of Dorotheus referred to in the text is the "Synopsis

A. D. 47. saith Baronius, receiveth no countenance from any ancient writers. What then, I pray, was Dorotheus himself, being bishop of Tyre under Diocletian and Constantine the Great? If the cardinal count him young, what grave seniors will he call ancient!

A. D. 56. 4. Aristobulus, though no apostle, yet an apostle's mate¹, counted one of the seventy disciples, is by Grecian writers made bishop of Britain². Strange that foreign authors should see more in our island than our homebred historians, wholly silent therof³ and it much weakeneth their testimony, because they give evidence of things done at such distance from them. But how easy is it for a writer with one word of his pen, to send an apostle many miles by land and leagues by sea, into a country wherein otherwise he never set his footing!

The result of all is this: churches are generally ambitious to entitle themselves to apostles for their founders, conceiving they should otherwise be esteemed but as of the second form, and younger house, if they received the faith from any inferior preacher. Wherefore as the heathen in searching after the original of their nations never leave soaring till they touch the clouds and fetch their pedigree from some god, so Christians think it nothing worth, except they relate the first planting of religion in their country to some apostle. Whereas indeed it

¹ de vita Prophetarum, Apo-
"stolorum." &c. and is generally supposed to be supposi-tious. The arguments respecting its genuineness have been briefly stated by Oudinus de Scrip. Eccl. I. 1378. See also Cave's Hist. Litt. I. p. 163.
Dorotheus flourished in 525.

Aristobulus was brother of Barnabas, according to the Menæ-See also the fragment of Heleus quoted by Usher, ib. 51.

² Annal. Eccl. in anno 44.
§ 38. Vol. I. p. 3. 1. ed. Mansi.
³ Rom. xii. 2.
⁴ Menæ Grecorum ad diem
15 Martii.

ters not, if the doctrine be the same, whether A.D. 56. apostles preached it by themselves, or by their successors. We see little certainty can be extracted so first brought the gospel hither; it is so long since, the British church hath forgotten her ownancy, who were her first godfathers. We see the light of the word shined here, but see not who idled it. I will not say, as God, to prevent idolatry, used the body of Moses to be concealed^h; so, to cut from posterity all occasion of superstition, he suffered the memories of our primitive planters to be buried in obscurity.

9. Now amongst the converts of the natives of this A.D. 63. and in this age to Christianity, Claudia (surnamed ^{Claudia}_{(notwithstanding Parsons'} Ruffina) is reputed a principal, wife to Pudens, a Roman senatorⁱ. And because all this is too high a step for our belief to climb at once, the ascent will ^{exceptions}_{might be a} more easy thus divided into stairs and half paces. First, That Claudia was a Britain born, Martial affirms it in his Epigram^j:

Claudia cœruleis cum sit Ruffina Britannis
Edita, cur Latiae pectora plebis habet?

Secondly, That this Claudia was wife to Pudens, the same poet averreth^k:

Claudia, Rufe, meo nubit peregrina Pudenti.
Macte esto tædis, o Hymenæe, tuis.

Thirdly, That there was a Pudens and Claudia living at Rome, both Christians, we have it from a more infallible pen of St. Paul himself,—Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren^l.

^h Deut. xxxiv. 6.

ⁱ See Usher, Brit. Eccl. Ant. 5.

^j Lib. xi. Epig. 54.

^k Lib. iv. Epig. 13.

^l 2 Tim. iv. 21.

A. D. 63.

Lastly, That this Claudia mentioned by St. Paul, then living at Rome, was the same Claudia, a Briton born, mentioned by Martial, is the opinion and probable conjecture of many modern writers.

But father Parsons will not admit hereof, because willingly he would not allow any sprinkling of Christianity in this island but what was rained from Rome, when Eleutherius sent to christian king Lucius; that so our engagement to the Romish church might be the more visible and conspicuous. This of Claudia Ruffina is "huddled up," saith he, "by our later heretical writers," (though some as catholic as himself in his own sense do entertain it¹.) "and hereby we see that heretics are but slight provers, and very deceitful in all matters, as well historical as doctrinal."

Parsons'objection to the contrary answered.

10. But be it known to him and others, that our history is founded on the best human books we can get, but our doctrine is grounded on what is best in itself, the divine scriptures. The matter in hand is so slight a controversy, that it cannot bear a demonstration on either side; it will suffice, if by answering his reasons to the contrary, we clear it from all impossibility and improbability; that it is not huddled, but built up by plummet and line with proportion to time and place.

1. Arg. There is a general silence of all antiquity in this matter.

Answe. Negative arguments from human writers in such historical differences are of small validity.

¹ Pitcairn is zealous for it. — Parsons, Three Convents i de Script. Brit. p. 72. ed. 1619. p. 18.

2. Arg. Martial, an heathen, would hardly so much A. D. 63. commend Claudia if she had been a Christian.

Ans. A wanton poet, in his chaste intervals, might praise that goodness in another which he would not practise in himself.

3. Arg. Claudia, spoken of by St. Paul, was in the time of Nero, and could not be known to Martial, who lived sixty years after, in the reign of Trajan.

Ans. Though Martial died a very old man in Trajan's days, yet he flourished under Nero, very familiar with his friend and fellow-poet Silius Italicus^a, in whose consulship Nero died.

4. Arg. That same Claudia (reported also the first hostess which entertained Peter and Paul) must be presumed ancient in Martial's remembrance, and therefore unfit to be praised for her beauty.

Ans. Even in the autumn of her age, when she had enriched her husband with three children, her vigorous beauty preserved by temperance might entitle her to the commendation of matron-like comeliness.

5. Arg. The children assigned in the Roman calendar to Claudia the Christian will not well agree to this British Claudia.

Ans. Little certainty can be extracted, and therefore nothing enforced to purpose, from the number and names of her children, such is the difference of several writers concerning them^o.

The issue of all is this. Claudia's story, as a British Christian, stands unremoved for any force of these objections, though one need not be much en-

^a Martial. lib. vii. Ep. 62. ^o Usher, Brit. Eccl. Ant. cap. 3.

A. D. 63. gaged herein: for whosoever is more than lukewarm is too hot in a case of so small consequence. Yet we will not willingly leave an hoof of the British honour behind which may be brought on; the rather to save the longing of such who delight on rath-ripe fruits; and antiquaries much please themselves to behold the probabilities of such early converts of our island. But now to return again to the prime planters of religion in Britain. As for all those formerly reckoned up, there is in authors but a tinkling mention of them; and the sound of their preaching low and little in comparison of those loud peals which are rung of Joseph of Arimathea his coming hither. Let the reader with patience take the sum thereof, extracted out of several authors.

The coming of Joseph of Arimathea into Britain. 11. ^pThe Jews, bearing an especial spite to Philip, (whether the apostle or deacon uncertain,) Joseph of Arimathea, Lazarus, Mary Magdalene, and Martha his sisters, with Marcella their servant, banished them out of Judaea, and put them into a vessel without sails and oars, with intent to drown them. Yet they, being tossed with tempests on the midland sea, at last safe landed at Marseilles in France. A relation as ill accounted with tacklings as their ship, and which is unrigged in respect of time and other circumstances; neither hath it the authority of any authentic writer for a pilot to steer it; which notwithstanding hath had the happiness to arrive at the hearing of many, and belief of some few. Now whilst ^qPhilip continued preaching the gospel in France, he sent Joseph of Arimathea over into Britain, with Joseph his son, and ten other associates, to convert the natives of that island to Christianity^r. These coming into Britain, found such entertainment from Arviragus the king, that though he would not be dissuaded from his idolatry by their preaching, yet he allowed them twelve hides of ground (an hide is as much as, being well manured, will maintain a family; or, as others say, as much as one plough can handsomely manage) in a desolate island, full of fens and brambles, called the Ynis-Witrin, since, by translation, Glassenbury. Here they built a small church, and by direction from Gabriel the archangel, dedicated it to the Virgin Mary, encompassing it about with a churchyard^s; in which church afterwards Joseph was buried: and here these twelve lived many years, devoutly serving God, and converting many to the Christian religion.

^p See Usher, &c. not in this ship, but was in
^q Some hold Philip came France before.

12. Now, a little to examine this history, we shall find, first, that no writer of credit can be produced before the conquest, who mentioneth Joseph's coming hither; but since that time (to make recompense for former silence) it is resounded from every side. As for Bale^t his citations out of Melkinus Avalonius^u and Gildas Albanius, seeing the originals are not extant, they be as uncertain as what Baronius hath transcribed out of an English^v manuscript in

^r [This tradition of Joseph of Arimathea, the origin of which (according to Usher) cannot be traced higher than the conquest, has justly been rejected by Stillingfleet altogether. See Usher, Brit. Eccl. Antiq. Praef. ad Lectorem, et p. 7.]

^s Malmsbury, MS. de Antiq.

Glaston. Ecclesiae. [Since published by Gale in Scriptor. XV. I. p. 292.]

^t [Script. Cent. I. §. 50 and 57.]

^u [Avalonius, that is, of Glastonbury.]

^v Written in our age, as archbishop Usher observes, Brit. Eccl. Ant. p. 15=8.

A.D. 63. the Vatican. Yet because the Norman charters of Glassenbury refer to a succession of many ancient charters bestowed on that church by several Saxon kings, as the Saxon charters relate to British grants in intuition to Joseph's being there; we dare not wholly deny the substance of the story, though the leaven of monkery hath much swollen and puffed up the circumstance thereof. For the mentioning of an enclosed churchyard overthrows the foundation of the church, seeing churches in that time got no such suburbs about them, as any churchyards to attend them. The burying his body in the church was contrary to the practice of that age, yea, dead men's corpses were brought no nearer than the porch some hundreds of years after. The dedication of the place to the Virgin Mary sheweth the story of later date, calculated for the elevation of saint-worship. In a word, as this relation of Joseph is presented unto us, it hath a young man's brow, with an old man's beard; I mean, novel superstitions, disguised with pretended antiquity.

The plan-form of the

13. In all this story of Joseph's living at Glassen-

* [Fuller apparently alludes to the charter of St. Patrick, dated A.D. 430, and subsequently confirmed by an insipimus, 6, 7, Edward II. This charter is doubtless a forgery, as Stillingfleet seems clearly to have proved. Antiq. of the British Churches, p. 17. Great suspicion is justly attached to all charters previous to the conquest, written in the Latin tongue. At that period, when the different religious houses were required to produce the title deeds of their lands, and the warrants for their other privileges and exemptions, this system of forgery was carried to considerable length, as might have been suspected. In a nation despising the Saxons and their language, as did the Normans, charters written in that language, which they did not and could not understand, would command but little respect. This charter of St. Patrick is printed in Gale's XV. Script. p. 216.]

bury, there is no one passage reported therein beareth A.D. 63.
 better proportion to time and place, than the church ^{most an-} which he is said to erect, whose dimensions, mate- ^{cient church} rials, and making, are thus presented unto us. It had ^{in Chris-} in length sixty feet^z, and twenty-six in breadth, ^{tendom.} made of rods, wattled or interwoven^a; where at one view we may behold the simplicity of primitive devotion, and the native fashion of British buildings in that age, and some hundred years after. For we find that ^bHoel Dha, king of Wales, made himself a palace of hurdle-work, called Twy Gwin, or the White House, because, for distinction sake, (to difference it from, and advance it above other houses,) the rods whereof it was made were unbarked, having the rind stripped off, which was then counted gay and glorious, as white-limed houses exceed those which are only rough-cast. In this small oratory, Joseph, with his companions, watched, prayed, fasted, preached; having high meditations under a low roof, and large hearts betwixt narrow walls. If credit may be given to these authors, this church, without competition, was senior to all Christian churches in the world. Let not then stately modern churches disdain to stoop with their highest steeples, reverently doing homage to this poor structure, as their first platform and precedent. And let their chequered pavements no more disdain this oratory's plain floor, than her thatched covering doth envy their leaden roofs. And although now it is meet that church

^z Ancient plate of brass in the custody of sir Henry Spelman; Concilia I. II. Wilkins, IV. 691-2.

^a Malmsbury ut prius, 293.

^b He was king of all Wales many years after, viz. 940. Camden's Brit. in Carmarthen-shire, p. 505.

A.D. 63. buildings, as well as private houses, partaking of the peace and prosperity of our age, should be both in their cost and cunning increased, (far be that pride and profaneness from any, to account nothing either too fair for man, or too foul for God,) yet it will not be amiss to desire, that our judgments may be so much the clearer in matters of truth, and our lives so much the purer in conversation, by how much our churches are more light, and our buildings more beautiful than they were.

A.D. 76.
Difference about the place of Joseph's burial.

14. Some difference there is about the place of burial of Joseph of Arimathea; some assigning his grave in the church of Glastonbury, others in the south corner of the churchyard, and others elsewhere. This we may be assured of, that he who resigned his own tomb to our Saviour, wanted not a sepulchre for himself. And here we must not forget, how ^{more than a thousand years after,} one John

[An additional presumption against the truth of this tradition; for although there were churches in the British cities from the introduction of Christianity, yet it was not customary to have churchyards within towns or cities, until Cuthbert archbishop of Canterbury obtained a dispensation from the pope for that purpose in 758; till that time none were buried within the city walls in England. See Stillingfleet, ib. p. 29. Weever's Fun. Monuments, p. 8. According to the last mentioned writer, quoting the authorities of Hospinian and Durand, both Jews and Gentiles used to bury their dead without the gates of towns and cities, " yet the true Christians, and such as by their lively faith were adopted ed the children of God, had further mystery in this their manner of interment; for by the carriage and burial of their dead corps without their city walls, they did publicly confirm and witness that the parties deceased were gone out of this world, to be made free denizens of another city, namely, heaven." This custom of burying without cities remained till the time of Gregory the Great.]

⁴ Matt. xxvii. 60.

⁵ A. D. 1345. the 19th of Edward III.

A.D. 76.

Blome of London, pretending an injunction from heaven to seek for the body of Joseph of Arimathea, obtained a license from king Edward the Third to dig at Glassenbury for the same, as by his^f patent doth appear. It seems his commission of inquiry never originally issued out of the court of heaven; for God never sends his servants on a sleeveless errand, but saith, Ask, and ye shall have; seek, and ye shall find. Whereas this man sought, and did never find, for ought we can hear of his inquisition. And we may well believe, that had he found the corse of Joseph, though fame might have held her peace, yet superstition would not have been silent; but long before this time she had roared it even into the ears of deaf men. And truly he might have digged at Glassenbury to the centre of the earth, and yet not met with what he sought for, if Joseph were buried ten miles off (as a Jesuit^g will have it) at Montacute, or in Hampden-hill. Hereafter there is hope, that the masons digging in the quarries thereof may light by chance on his corpse, which (if fond papists might prize it) would prove more beneficial to them than the best bed of free-stone they ever opened. The best is, be Joseph's body where it will, his soul is certainly happy in heaven.

15. Some ascribe to the sanctity of this Joseph The budding hawthorn nigh Glassenbury attrib. the yearly budding of the hawthorn near Glassenbury on Christmas day, no less than an annual miracle.

^f In the tower, 19th of Edward III. part i. mem. 8. [This patent is printed in Rymer's Fod. III. part i. p. 44, new edition, and also by Usher, ib. p. 15.]

^g Guilielmus Goodus, cited by archbishop Usher, Brit. Eccl. Ant. p. 28=16. [See a further account of him and his work in Alegambe's Biblioth. Soc. Jesu. p. 314. ed. 1676.]

A. D. 76. This, were it true, were an argument (as king James buted a ~~mis~~ did once pleasantly urge it) to prove our old style made to Joseph's holiness.
before the new, (which prevents our computation by ten days, and is used in the church of Rome,) yea, all prognosticators might well calculate their almanacks from this hawthorn. Others more warily affirm, that it doth not punctually and critically bud on Christmas day, (such miracles must be tenderly touched, lest, crushed by harsh handling they vanish into smoke, like the apples of Sodom,) but on the days near, or about it. However, it is very strange that this hawthorn should be the harbinger, and (as it were) ride post to bring the first news of the spring, holding alone (as it may seem) correspondency with the trees of the antipodes, whilst other hawthorns near unto it have nothing but winter upon them.

Different opinions of men concerning it.

16. It is true, by pouring every night warm water on the root thereof, a tree may be matured artificially to bud out in the midst of winter; but it is not within suspicion that any such cost is here expended. Some likewise affirm, that if an hawthorn be grafted upon an holly, it is so adopted into the stock, that it will bud in winter; but this doth not satisfy the accurateness of the time. Wherefore most men, pursued to render a reason hereof, take refuge at occulta qualitas, the most mannerly confession of ignorance. And God sometimes puts forth such questions and riddles in nature, on purpose to pose the pride of men conceited of their skill in such matters. But some are more uncharitable in this point, who, because they cannot find the reason hereof on earth, do fetch it from hell; not sticking to affirm, that the Devil, to dandle the infant faith of fond people, works these petty feats.

and petty wonders, having further intents to invite A.D. 76.
them to superstition, and mould them to saint-worship thereby.

17. However, there is no necessity that this should be imputed to the holiness of Arimathean Joseph. The subject of the question taken away. For there is (as it is credibly said) an oak in New-forest, nigh Lindhurst, in Hantshire, which is endued with the same quality, putting forth leaves about the same time, where the firmness of the rind thereof much increaseth the wonder; and yet to my knowledge (for ought I could ever learn) none ever referred it to the miraculous influence of any saint. But I lose precious time, and remember a pleasant story, how two physicians, the one a Galenist, the other a Paracelsian, being at supper, fell into a hot dispute about the manner of digestion; and whilst they began to engage with earnestness in the controversy, a third man casually coming in, carried away the meat from them both. Thus whilst opposite parties discuss the cause of this hawthorn's budding on Christmas day, some soldiers have lately cut the tree down, and Christmas day itself is forbidden to be observed; and so, I think, the question is determined.

18. To conclude this century. By all this it doth not appear that the first preachers of the gospel in Britain did so much as touch at Rome, much less that they received any command or commission thence to convert Britain, which should lay an eternal obligation of gratitude on this island to the see of Rome. Insomuch that Parsons himself (as unwilling to confess, as unable to deny so apparent a truth) flies at last to this slight and slender shift; “^hThat “albeit S. Joseph came not immediately from Rome,

^h Three Conversations, I. p. 25.

A.D. 76. “—yet he taught in England” (in Britain he would say) “the Roman faith.—Of which Roman faith St. Paul hath written to the Romans themselves, before the going of S. Joseph into Britany: ‘Fides nostra annuntiatur in universo mundo.’” Hereby the Jesuit hopes still to keep on foot the engagement of this island to Rome for her first conversion. But why should he call the Christian religion the Roman faith, rather than the faith of Jerusalem, or the faith of Antioch, seeing it issued from the former, and was received and first named in the latter city, before any spark of Christianity was kindled at Rome. But, what is the main, he may sooner prove the modern Italian tongue, now spoken in Rome, to be the selfsame in propriety and purity with the Latin language in Tully’s time, than that the religion professed in that city at this day, with all the errors and superstitions thereof, is the same in soundness of doctrine and sanctity of life with that faith which by St. Paul in the Roman church was then so highly commended.

¹ Rom. i. 8.

THE SECOND CENTURY.

TO ROBERT ABDY OF LONDON, Esq.^a

*He that hath an hand to take, and no tongue to return thanks, deserveth for the future to be lame and dumb.
Which punishment, that it may not light on me, accept this acknowledgment of your favours to your devoted friend and servant,*

T. F.

ESIRE of our country's honour would A.D. 105.
now make us lay claim to Taurinus, Taurinus no bishop of York.
bishop of York, and reported martyr.

To strengthen our title unto him we could produce many ^bwriters affirming it, if number made weight in this case. But, being convinced in our judgment that such as make him a Briton ground their pretence on a leading mistake, reading him episcopum Eboracensem, instead of Ebroi-censem, Eureux (as I take it) in France^c; we will not enrich our country by the errors of any, or advantage her honour by the misprisions of others. Thus being conscientiously scrupulous not to take or touch a thread which is none of our own, we may with more

^a [Abdy of London and of Albyns to Essex, arms. Or, 2 chevronels between 3 trefoils sable.—Robert Abdy of London and Albyns, merchant, was created a baronet 9 June, 1660, married Catherine, daughter of sir John Gayer, knight, ob. circ. 1670 B.]

^b Guil. Harrison, Descript. Brit. in Holinshed. I. 9. p. 23. Wernerus Rolewink de Laer.

in Fasciculo, anno 94. f. 28.
b. ed. 1477. and Hartmannus Schedelius in Chronico.
f. CXI. a. [This conjecture was proposed by Harrison himself; see his Chron. ib. It is fully supported by the authorities quoted by Usher, ib. 17.]

^c [See Usher, Brit. Eccl. Ant. p. 17.]

A.D. 103. boldness hereafter keep what is justly ours, and challenge what is unjustly detained from us.

A.D. 108. Difference of authors concerning the time of king Lucius his conversion. 2. But the main matter which almost engrosseth all the history of this century, and, by scattered dates, is spread from the beginning to the end thereof, is the conversion of Lucius, king of Britain, to Christianity^c. However, not to dissemble, I do adventure thereon with much averseness, seeming sadly to presage, that I shall neither satisfy others nor myself; such is the variety, yea contrariety of writers about the time thereof. If the trumpet (saith the apostle) gireth an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle? He will be at a loss to order and dispose this story aright, who listeneth with greatest attention to the trumpet of antiquity, sounding at the same time a march and retreat; appointing Lucius to come into the world by his birth, when others design him, by death, to go out of the same. Behold, reader, a view of their differences presented unto thee; and it would puzzle Apollo himself to tune these jarring instruments into a concert.

These make king Lucius converted

A.D.

1 P. Jovius in Descrip. Brit. [p. 4. ed. Basil. fol. 1578.]	99
2 Jo. Cajus in Hist. Cantab. [p. 22.]	103
3 Annals of Burton. [In Usher, p. 20. An interpolation; the printed copy does not commence so early.]	137
4 Nennius, in one copy. [Hist. Brit. chap. 13.] ^d	144

^c [Respecting this story of king Lucius, see Stillingfleet's Ant. of the British CC. p. 58. sq., and Usher, ib.]

^d [The printed copies of the best MSS. of Nennius place the conversion of Lucius in the year 164, and in this they very nearly agree with Bede; probably both writers would be found more perfectly to coincide, were the different systems of chronology which each followed duly observed.]

5 Annals of Crokysdene. [Usher, ib. 20.]	150	A. D. 108.
6 Jeffery Monmouth. [f. xxxiii.] ^e	155
7 John Capgrave.	156
8 Matth. Florilegus, [or Mat. of Westminster; according to a MS. quoted by Usher, ib. The printed copy, as mentioned below, gives the date 185.] ...	158
9 Florence Vigorniensis, [p. 181.]	162
10 Antiq. of Winchester. [Usher, ib. 20.]	164
11 Tho. Rudborne, jun. [Wharton, A. S. i. 180.] ...	165
12 Wil. of Malmesbury. [De Antiq. Glaston. p. 293.]	166
13 Venerable Bede. [E. H. v. p. 24.]	167
14 Henry of Erphurt. [Usher, ib. 21.]	169
15 Annals of Lichfield. [Usher, ib. 21.]	175
16 Marianus Scotus. [In anno, ed. Basil. 1559.]	177
17 Ralph de Baldoc. [Usher, ib.]	178
18 John Bale. [Script. i. §. 29.]	179
19 Polydor Virgil. [p. 41. ed. Basil. 1557.]	182
20 Roger de Wendover. [Usher, ib.]	183
21 Chron. Brit. Abbrev. [Usher, ib.]	184
22 Matth. Paris, (Westminster.) [Usher, ib.]	185
23 Hector Beothius, [p. 83. Paris. 1574.]	187
24 Martinus Polonus, [p. 49. ed. Basil. 1559.]	188
25 Saxon Annals, [p. 7. ed. Gibson.]	189
26 John Harding, [chap. 51.] ^f	190

Here is more than a grand jury of writers, which neither agree in their verdicts with their foreman, nor one with another; there being betwixt the first and the last, Paulus Jovius and John Harding, ninety years distance in their account. This, with other arguments,

^e [I do not know upon what authority Fuller makes this assertion; Geoffry of Monmouth states that king Lucius died A. D. 156, but does not give the date of his conversion. "De Gestis," &c. fol. xxxiii, xxxiv. ed. Bad. Ascens. 1517.]

^f [I have supplied, and inserted in the text the references which are enclosed between brackets, in order to avoid confusion.]

A.D. 106. is used not only to shake, but shatter the whole representation of the story. And we must endeavour to clear this objection before we go farther, which is abrewdly pressed by many. For if the two elders which accused Susanna were condemned for liars, being found in two tales; the one laying the scene of her inconstancy under a ⁴ mastich tree, the other under an holm tree; why may not the relation of Lucius be also condemned for a fiction, seeing the reporters thereof more differ in time than the forenamed elders in place; seeing when and where are two circumstances, both equally important and concerning in history to the truth of any action?

The history of king Lucius not disproved by the dissension of authors concerning the time thereof.

3. But we answer, That however learned men differ in the date, they agree in the deed. They did set themselves so to heed the matter, as of most moment, being the soul and substance of history, that they were little curious (not to say very careless) in accurate noting of the time; which being well observed, doth not only add some lustre, but much strength to a relation. And indeed all computation in the primitive time is very uncertain, there being then (and a good while after) an anarchy, as I may term it, in authors their reckoning of years, because men were not subject to any one sovereign rule in accounting the year of our Lord, but every one followed his own arithmetic, to the great confusion of history, and prejudice of truth. In which age, though all start from the same place, our Saviour's birth, yet running in several ways of account, they seldom meet together in their dating of any memorable accident. Worthy therefore was his work, whoever he was, who first calculated the computation we use at A.D. 108. this day, and so set Christendom a copy whereby to write the date of actions, which since being generally used, hath reduced chronology to a greater certainty.

⁴ Susanna, v. 54 and 58.

4. As for their objection, that Lucius could not be Lucius might be a king in the south of Britain, because it was then British king under reduced to be a province under the Roman mon-^{the Roman} archy, it affects not any that understand how it was monarchy. the Roman custom, both to permit and appoint petty kings in several countries (as Antiochus in Asia, Herod in Judæa, Deiotarus in Galatia), who, under them, were invested with regal power and dignity. And this was conceived to conduce to the state and amplitude of their empire^f; yea, the German emperor at this day, successor to the Roman mon-archy, is styled rex regum, as having many princes, and particularly the king of Bohemia, homagers under him. As for other inconsistents with truth, which depend, as retainers, on this relation of king Lucius, they prove not that this whole story should be refused, but refined; which calleth aloud to the discretion of the reader, to fan the chaff from the corn, and to his industry, to rub the rust from the gold, which almost of necessity will cleave to matters of such antiquity. Thus conceiving that for the main we have asserted king Lucius, we come to relate his history as we find it.

5. He being much taken with the miracles which A.D. 167. Lucius he beheld truly done by pious Christians, fell in ad-^{sendeth to} miration of, and love with their religion; and sent ^{the bishop} of Rome to be instruct-^{ed in Christianity.}

^e Vetere ac jampridem recepta populi Romani consuetudine, ut haberet instrumenta servitutis et reges. Tacitus in vita Agricolæ, ch. 14.

^f [See Usher, ib. 23, 24.]

A.D. 167. Elvanus and Meduinus, men of known piety, and learning in the scriptures, to Eleutherius bishop of Rome, with a letter, requesting several things of him, but principally, that he might be instructed in the Christian faith. The reason why he wrote to Rome was, because at this time the church therein was (she can ask no more, we grant no less) the most eminent church in the world, shining the brighter, because set on the highest candlestick, the imperial city. We are so far from grudging Rome the happiness she once had, that we rather bemoan she lost it so soon, degenerating from her primitive purity. The letter which Lucius^b wrote is not extant at this day, and nothing thereof is to be seen, save only by reflection, as it may be collected by the answer returned by Eleutherius, which (such an one as it is) it will not be amiss here to insert.

A.D. 169. 6. “Ye require of us the Roman laws and the emperor’s to be sent over to you, which you would practice and put in use within your realm. The Roman laws and the emperor’s we may ever reprove, but the law of God we may not. Ye have received of late, through God’s mercy, in the kingdom of Britain, the law and faith of Christ; ye have with you within the realm, both parts of the

^a [The cause of this mission is examined by Usher, ib. 24 sq.]

^b [The tenor of it is given by Usher from a poem by Gildas the Briton, though probably having no other foundation than the imagination of the author. See Usher, ib. 27.]

^c This translation of the letter of Eleutherius is transcribed out of bishop Godwin’s Catalogue of Bishops, p. 31. ed. 1615. [The original will be found in the Latin copy of Godwin’s work, p. 22. ed. Cant. 1743; and in Parker’s Antiq. p. 7. ed. Drake.] There is some variety between this and that of Mr Fox’s Martyrology, I. 139, ed. 1641. [Usher has also printed it from a collation of five MSS. See Best. Eccl. Ant. p. 54.]

“ scriptures. Out of them by God’s grace, with the A.D. 169.
 “ council of your realm, take ye a law, and by that “ law (through God’s sufferance) rule your kingdom
 “ of Britain. For you be God’s vicar in your king“ dom. The Lord’s is the earth, and the fulness of the world, and all that dwell in it. And again, ac“ cording to the Prophet that was a king, Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, therefore God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And again, according to the “ same Prophet, O God, give judgment unto the king, and thy righteousness unto the king’s son, &c. He “ said not, the judgment and righteousness of the “ emperor, but thy judgment and righteousness. The “ king’s sons be the Christian people and folk of the “ realm, which be under your government, and live,
 “ and continue in peace within your kingdom. As the “ gospel saith, Like as the hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, so doth the king his people. The “ people and folk of the realm of Britain be yours, “ whom, if they be divided, ye ought to gather in “ concord and peace, to call them to the faith and “ law of Christ, to cherish and ^kto maintain them, to “ rule and govern them, so as you may reign ever“ lastingly with him whose vicar you are: which,
 “ with the Father, and the Son, &c.”

7. Now we have done our threshing, we must begin our winnowing, to examine the epistle. For the trade of counterfeiting the letters of eminent men began very early in the church. Some were tampering with it in the apostles’ time, which occasioned St. Paul’s¹ caution, That ye be not soon shaken A preparative for the examining the truth of this letter.

^k In the Latin it is, Manu tenere.

¹ 2 Thess. ii. 2.

A.D. 169. in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us. Since men (then but apprentices) are now grown masters in this mystery, wherefore it will be worth our examining whether this epistle be genuine or no. Say not this doth betray a peevish, if not malicious disposition, and argues a vexatious spirit in him, which will now call the title of this letter in question, which time out of mind hath been in the peaceable possession of an authentic reputation, especially seeing it soundeth in honorem ecclesie Britannicar. and, grant it a tale, yet it is smoothly told, to the credit of the British church. But let such know that our church is sensible of no honour but what resulteth from truth: and if this letter be false, the longer it hath been received, the more need there is of a speedy and present confutation, before it be so firmly rooted in men's belief, past power to remove it. See therefore the arguments which shake the credit thereof.

1. The date of this letter differs in several copies, and yet none of them light right on the time of Eleutherius, according to the computation of the best esteemed authors.

2. It relates to a former letter of king Lucius, wherein he seemeth to request of Eleutherius, both what he himself had before, and what the good bishop was unable to grant. For what need Lucius send for the Roman laws, to which Britain was already subJECTED, and ruled by them? At this very time, wherein this letter is pretended to be wrote, the Roman laws were here in force; and therefore to send for them hither was even actum agere, and to as much purpose, as to fetch water from Tiber to Thames. Besides, Eleutherius of all men was most improper to have such a suit preferred to him: holy A.D. 167. man! he little meddled with secular matters, or was acquainted with the emperor's laws; only he knew how to suffer martyrdom in passive obedience to his cruel edicts.

3. How high a throne doth this letter mount Lucius on, making him a monarch? who (though rex Britannicus) was not rex Britanniae, (except by a large synecdoche,) neither sole nor supreme king here, but partial, and subordinate to the Romans.

4. The scripture quoted is out of St. Hierom's translation, which came more than a hundred years after. And the age of Eleutherius could not understand the language of manu tenere, for to maintain, except it did antedate some of our modern lawyers to be their interpreter.

In a word, we know that the Gibeonites their mouldy bread was baked in an oven very near the Israelites^m, and this letter had its original of a later dateⁿ; which not appearing anywhere in the world till a thousand years after the death of Eleutherius, probably crept out of some monk's cell some four hundred years since, the true answer of Eleutherius being not extant for many years before.

8. But to proceed. Eleutherius, at the request of ^{King Lu-} ^{cius bap-} King Lucius, sent unto him ^oFaganus and Derwianus, or Dunianus, two holy men, and grave divines, to instruct him in the Christian religion, by whom the said king Lucius (called by the Britons Leuer Maur^p, or the great light) was baptized, with many of ditions.

^m Joshua ix. 12.

ⁿ See sir H. Spelman's Concilia, I. 34, &c., where there is another copy of this letter, with some alterations and ad-

^o Aliter Phaganus et Du-vianus.

^p [According to Usher, ib.
p. 22.]

A.D. 167. his subjects. For if when private persons were converted, Cornelius, Lydia^a, &c., their households also were baptized with them, it is easily credible that the example of a king embracing the faith drew many followers of court and country; sovereigns seldom wandering alone without their retinue to attend them. But whereas some report that most, yea^b, all of the natives of this island then turned Christians, it is very improbable; and the weary traveller may sooner climb the steepest mountains in Wales, than the judicious reader believe all the hyperbolical reports in the British chronicles hereof.

I. Monmouth his action of flamen and arch-flamen.

9. For Jeffery Monmouth tells us^c, that at this time there were in England twenty-eight cities, each of them having a 'flamen, or pagan priest; and three of them, namely, London, York, and Caerlion in Wales, had archflamens, to which the rest were subjected: and Lucius placed bishops in the room of the flamens, and archbishops, metropolitana, in the places of archflamens. All which, saith he, solemnly received their confirmation from the pope. But herein our author seems not well acquainted with the propriety of the word flamen, their use and office amongst the Romans, who were not set severally, but many together in the same city. Nor were they subordinate one to another, but all to the priests college, and therein to the Pontifex Maximus. Besides, the British "manuscript, which Monmouth is conceived to have translated, makes no mention of

^a Acts xvi. 15 and 32

^c Monmouth de gestis Brit.

^b Ita ut in brevi, nullus in- f. 33
veniretur infidelis Matth.

Westm. v. Paris, p. 112. f. 37 = 31

^d (See Usher, ib. 31 sq.)

^b Usher, De Brit. Eccl. p.

these flamens. Lastly, these words archbishop and metropolitan are so far from being current in the days of king Lucius, that they were not coined till after-ages. So that in plain English, his flamens and archflamens seem flams and archflams, even notorious falsehoods^x.

10. Great also is the mistake of ^yanother British historian, affirming how in the days of king Lucius this island was divided into five Roman provinces; namely, Britain the first, Britain the second, Flavia, Maximia, and Valentia; and that each of these were then divided into twelve bishoprics, sixty in the whole; a goodly company, and more by half than

^x [This error arose from a misunderstanding of the nature of the office of the flamines. There were no archiflamines among the Romans, nor any similar religious order having the same relation to the flamines as an archbishop does to a bishop. The sacerdotes provinciarum had subordinate priests under them, but this sacerdotal order did not exist till long after the introduction of Christianity into Britain, and was derived by Maximianus from the Christian priesthood, as Stillingfleet seems clearly to have shewn, Antiquities of the British Churches, p. 77 sq. See also "The Appeal, &c." p. 68. Usher judiciously observes, that although these accounts of king Lucius derived principally from Geoffry of Monmouth are deserving of no credit, yet that there cannot be any doubt of the gospel having been preached in Britain as early as the times of the apostles. We have the authority of Bede and the Liber Pontificalis (improperly attributed to S. Jerom and Damasus) for Lucius being the first Christian king of this island. But the imagination of Geoffry, not satisfied with this simple fact, has converted a petty king into a Roman monarch, and these twenty bishops are but the coinage of his brain. Brit. Eccl. Ant. præf. ad Lectorem, and p. 49 sq. See some judicious observations on the subject in Godwin, De præsul. Angl. p. 20.]

^y Giraldus Cambrensis de Sedis Menevensis dignitate, apud D. Joh. Priseum, [in Hist. Brit. Defens. p. 75. ed. 1573. This whole treatise of Giraldus has since been published by Wharton. See Ang. Sac. II. 541, where the passage here referred to will be found.]

A.D. 167. ever this land did behold. Whereas these provinces were so named from Valens, Maximus, and Flavius Theodosius, Roman emperors, many years after the death of Lucius. Thus, as the damsel convinced St. Peter to be a Galilean, for, said she, *Thy speech agreeth thereto*², so this fivefold division of Britain, by the very novelty of the names, is concluded to be of far later date than what that author pretendeth.

Pagan temples in Britain converted to Christian churches.

11. But it is generally agreed, that about this time many pagan temples in Britain had their property altered, and the selfsame were converted into Christian churches; particularly that dedicated to Diana in London, and another near it, formerly consecrated to Apollo, in the city now called Westminster. This was done, not out of covetousness, to save charges in founding new fabrics, but out of Christian thirst; conceiving this imitation an invitation to make heathens come over more cheerfully to the Christian faith; when beholding their temples (whereof they had an high and holy opinion) not sacrilegiously demolished, but solemnly continued to a pious end, and rectified to the service of the true God. But human policy seldom proves prosperous when tampering with Divine worship, especially when without or against direction from God's word. This new wine, put into old vessels, did in after-ages taste of the cask, and in process of time, Christianity, keeping a correspondence and some proportion with paganism, got a smack of heathen ceremonies. Surely they had better have built new nests for the holy dove, and not have lodged it where screech-

² Mark xiv. 70.

turned into the church of All-

³ Thus the Pantheon, or ⁴ minty, shrine of all gods in Rome, was owls and unclean birds had formerly been harboured. A.D. 167.

 If the high priest amongst the Jews was forbidden to marry a widow, or divorced woman, but that he should take a virgin of his own people to wife^b, how unseemly was it, that God himself should have the reversion of profaneness assigned to his service, and his worship wedded to the relict, yea, (what was worse,) whorish shrines, formerly abused with idolatry!

12. Some report that at this time three thousand A.D. 178.
 philosophers of the university of Cambridge were The bounty of king Lucius came to Cambridge. converted and baptized; that king Lucius came thither, and bestowed many ^cprivileges and immunities on the place, with much other improbable matter^d. For surely they do a real wrong, under a pretended courtesy, to that famous academy, to force a peruke of false grey hair upon it, whose reverend wrinkles already command respect of themselves. Yet Cambridge makes this use of these overgrown charters of pope Eleutherius, king Lucius, king Arthur, and the like, to send them out in the front as the forlorn hope, when she is to encounter with Oxford in point of antiquity; and if the credit of such old monuments be cut off (as what else can be expected), yet she still keeps her main battle firm and entire, consisting of stronger authorities, which follow after. Nor doth Cambridge care much to cast away such doubtful charters, provided her sister likewise quit all title to fabulous antiquity (setting dross against dross) and waiving tales, try both the truth of their age by the register of unquestioned

^b Lev. xxi. 14.

tab. p. 22. ed. 1574.

^c Caius de Antiq. Cantab. p. 51. ed. 1574. et Hist. Can-

^d [Usher, ib. p. 68.]

A.D. 178. authors, if this difference betwixt them be conceived to deserve the deciding.

13. Besides the churches aforementioned, many others there were whose building is ascribed to king Lucius, as namely^c:

A.D. 179. 1. St. Peter's in Cornhill in London, to which Ciran, a great courtier, lent his helping hand. It is said, for many years after, to have been the seat of an archbishopric: one Thean first enjoyed that dignity^d.

2. Ecclesia primar sedis, or the chief cathedral church in Gloucester.

A.D. 180. 3. A church at Winchester, consecrated by Faganus and Duvianus, whereof one Devotus was made abbot.

4. A church and college of Christian philosophers at Bangor.

A.D. 187. 5. The church dedicated to St. Mary in Glassenbury, repaired and raised out of the ruins by Faganus and Duvianus, where they lived with twelve associates.

6. A ^bchapel in honour of Christ in Dover castle.

7. The church of St. Martin in Canterbury: understand it thus, that church which in after-ages was new named, and converted to the honour of that saint.

Of all these, that at Winchester was king Lucius his darling, which he endowed with large revenues.

^c (See Usher's Ecc. Brit. Usher, ib. 36.)
Antiq. p. 69, where the subject of these chapels and churches is examined.)

^d Pitcairn's de Britan. Scriptur. p. 79.
^b Leland assert. Arthur. f. 7. ed. 1544.

^c Tabula penalis quae adhuc in illa ecclesia cernitur. (See giving it all the land twelve miles on every side of A.D. 187. the city, fencing the church about with a churchyard, on which he bestowed privileges of a sanctuary, and building a dormitory and refectory for the monks there; if the little history of ¹Winchester be to be believed, whose credit is very suspicious, because of the modern language used therein. For as country painters, when they are to draw some of the ancient scripture patriarchs, use to make them with bands, cuffs, hats, and caps, à la mode to the times wherein they themselves do live; so it seemeth the author of this history last cited (lacking learning to acquaint him with the garb and character of the age of king Lucius) doth pourtray and describe the bounty and church-buildings of that king, according to the phrase and fashion of that model of monkery in his own age.

14. Some Dutch writers report^k, that king Lucius Two Luciuses con-founded into one. in his old age left his kingdom, and went over into France, thence into Germany, as far as the Alps; where he converted all ¹Rhetia, and the city of Augspurg in Suevia, by his preaching, with the assistance of Emerita his sister; it being no news, in God's harvest, to see women with their sickles a reaping. It is confessed that converting of souls is a work worthy a king; David's and Solomon's preaching hath silenced all objections to the contrary. It is

ⁱ Manuscript. in Bibliotheca Cottoniana. [This is probably the MS. now preserved in the Cotton library, Domit. XIII. or else a paper MS. which was almost destroyed by fire now marked Galba A. XV. in the same repository. See Whar-

ton's Ang. Sac. I. 179, 180, and præf. p. xxvi.]

^k [See Usher, De Eccl. Brit. p. 17 and 70.]

^l Velser. Rerum August. Vindelic. lib. vi. ad an. 179. p. 136. ed. 1593.

A. D. 187. also acknowledged, that kings used to renounce the world, and betake themselves to such pious employment; though this custom, frequent in after-ages, was not so early a rise as to be up so near the primitive times. It is therefore well observed by a learned [■]man, that Lucius the German preacher was a different person from the British king, who never departed our island, but died therein. I have read, how a woman in the Lower Palatinate, being big with twins, had the fruit of her womb so strangely altered by a violent [■]contusion casually befalling her, that she was delivered of one monster with two heads^o, which nature had intended for two perfect children. Thus the history of this age being pregnant with a double Lucius at the same time, is by the carelessness of unadvised authors so jumbled and confounded together, that those which ought to have been parted as distinct persons, make up one monstrous one, without due proportion to truth, yea, with the manifest prejudice thereof.

[■] Achilles Gassarus in Augustae urbis descriptione.
 [This work, according to Saxius (Onomast. III. 164. ed. 1780.), is only in MS. It appears to have been known to Usher, from whom Fuller borrowed this reference, merely through Munster's Cosmograph. de Germania, III. 609, who has quoted largely from Germania.

 See Usher, De Ecccl. Brit. 17 and 71.]

[■] Munsteri Cosmographia, p. 625. ed. 1559.

^o [Two monsters with one head; two perfect children connected inseparably by the forehead.]

THE THIRD CENTURY.

TO MR. SIMEON BONNELL, MERCHANT.^a

It is proportionable to present a century, short in story, to one low in stature, though deservedly high in the esteem of your friend,

T. F.

F all centuries this begins most sadly^b; A.D. 201.
at the entrance whereof we are accosted with the funerals of king Lucius, (the brightest sun must set,) buried, as they say, in Gloucester. Different dates of his death are assigned, but herein we have followed the ^cmost judicious. Long after, the monks of that convent bestowed an epitaph upon him, having in it nothing worthy of translating.

The death, burial, and epitaph of king Lucius.

Lucius in tenebris prius idola qui coluisti,
Es merito celebris ex quo baptisma subistid.

It seems the puddle-poet did hope, that the jingling of his rhyme would drown the sound of his false quantity; except any will say that he affected to make the middle syllable in idola short, because in the days of king Lucius idolatry was curbed and

^a [Bonnell of London. Arms, Or, a lion rampant within an orle of 8 cross crosslets az. B.] ^b [See Usher, ib. 72 sq.] ^c Annals of Sarum, M. Paris and Westm. The London tables, and Hist. of Rochester, quoted by Usher, ib.

^d John Fiberius or Bever, and the Abbreviat. of the Brit. Chron., quoted by Usher, Brit. Eccl. Antiq. 73.

A.D. 201. contracted, whilst Christianity did dilate and extend itself.

The Christian faith from the first preaching thereof ever continued in Britain.

2. But Christianity in Britain was not buried in the grave of Lucius, but survived after his death. Witness Gildas, whose words deserve to be made much of, as the clearest evidence of the constant continuing of religion in this island. "Christ's precepts," saith he⁴, "though they were received but lukewarmly of the inhabitants, yet they remained entirely with some, less sincerely with others, even until the nine years of persecution under Diocletian." Whose expression concerning the entertaining of Christianity here, though spoken indefinitely of the British inhabitants, yet we are so far from understanding it universally of all this island, or generally of the most, or eminently of the principal parts thereof, that, if any list to contend that the main of Britain was still pagan, we will not oppose. A thing neither to be doubted of, nor wondered at, if the modern complaints of many be true, that even in this age there are dark corners in this kingdom, where profaneness lives quietly with invincible ignorance; yea, that the first professors in Christianity were but lukewarm in religion, will (without oath made for the truth thereof) be easily believed by such who have felt the temper of the English Laodiceans nowadays. However, it appears there were some honest hearts, that still kept Christianity on foot in the kingdom. So that since religion first dwelt here, it never departed hence; like

⁴ Quæ (precepta in Britanniæ) licet ab incolis tepide cœliam novenam — permane-
suepta sunt, apud quoddam sere. Hist. Gildas, c. vii. p. 3.
Tamen integre, et alio minus. ed. Gale.

the candle of the virtuous wife, It went not out by night^e : by the night neither of ignorance, nor of security, nor of persecution. The island generally never was an apostate, nor by God's blessing ever shall be.

3. To the authority of Gildas we will twist the testimony of two fathers, both flourishing in this century, Tertullian and Origen ; plainly proving Christianity in Britain in this age ; both of them being undoubtedly orthodox (without mixture of Montanist or Millenary) in historical matters. Hear the former : “ There are places of the Britons which were unaccessible to the Romans, but yet subdued to Christ.” Origen in like manner : “ The power of God our Saviour is even with them which in Britain are divided from our world.” These ought to prevail in any rational belief, rather than the detracting reports of two modern men, Paradine and Dempster, who affirm that after Lucius’ death, the British nation returned to their heathen rites, and remained infidels for full five hundred years after^h. Which wordsⁱ, if casually falling from them, may be

^e Prov. xxxi. 18.

^f Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo vero subdita. Tertull. advers. Judæos. c. vii.

^g Virtus Domini Salvatoris et cum his est, qui ab orbe nostro in Britannia dividuntur. Orig. in Lucæ c. 1. Hom. 6. III. 939. ed. Huet.

^h [For an account of the falsehood of this report and its origin, see Usher, ib. 91.]

ⁱ Paradine Ang. descrip.

comp. c. 22, as quoted by Usher, ib. 74. Dempster in Apparat. Hist. Scot. I. 6. [Of Paradine’s very rare book I have never seen a copy. It was printed at Paris in the year 1545, according to Nicéron, Mem. xxxiii. 169, who gives it the following title : “ Anglicæ descriptionis et historicæ Compendium.” W. Paradine was dean of the collegiate church of Baujeu.

A.D. 201. passed by with pardon; if ignorantly uttered (from such pretenders to learning), will be heard with wonder; if wilfully vented, must be taxed for a shameless and impudent falsehood. Had Dempster (the more positive of the two in this point) read as many authors as he quoteth, and marked as much as he read, he must have confuted himself: yea, though he had obstinately shut his eyes, so clear a truth would have shined through his eyelids^k. It will be no wild justice or furious revenge, but equity, to make themselves satisfaction, if the Britons declare Dempster devoid of the faith of an historian, who endeavoured to deprive their ancestors of the Christian faith for many years together; his pen, to befriend the north, doing many bad offices to the south part of this island.

The judgment of the Magdeburgenses in this point.

4. The Magdeburgenses, compilers of the General Ecclesiastical History, not having less learning, but more ingenuity, speaking of the churches through Europe in this age, thus express themselves: "Then follow the isles of the ocean, where we first meet with Britain; Mansisse et hac arte ejus insulae ecclesiis, affirmare non dubitamus; we doubt not to affirm, that the churches of that island did also remain in this age." But as for the names of the places, and persons professing it, we crave to be excused from bringing in the bill of our particulars.

^k [Thomas Dempsterus, lected without any discrimination a mass of most senseless homo multar lectionis sed nullius plane judicii. Usher De Brit. Eccl. 6. A very mild censure of a man who has col-] ¹ Cent. III. 2. col. 6. rubbish.]

5. By the Levitical law, If an ox, sheep, or beast, A.D. 201.
were delivered to a man to keep, and it were stolen Want of work no fault of the workman.
away from him, the keeper should make restitution to the owner thereof; but if it was torn in pieces, and he could bring the fragments thereof for witness, he was not bound to make it good^m. Had former historians delivered the entire memory of the passages of this century to our custody, and charged us with them, the reader might justly have blamed our negligence, if for want of our industry or carefulness they had miscarried; but seeing they were devoured by age, in evidence whereof we produce these torn rever-sions, hardly rescued from the teeth of time, we presume no more can justly be exacted of us.

6. Gildasⁿ very modestly renders the reason why Reason why so little left of this age. so little is extant of the British history : Scripta patricæ, scriptorumve monumenta, si quæ fuerint, aut ignibus hostium exusta, aut civium exulum classe longius deportata, non comparent. “The monuments,” saith he, “of our country, or writers (if there were “any) appear not, as either burnt by the fire of “enemies, or transported far off by our banished “countrymen.”

7. This is all I have to say of this century; and Conclusion of this century. must now confess myself as unable to go on, so ashamed to break off; scarce having had, of a full hundred years, so many words of solid history. But as I find little, so I will feign nothing; time being better spent in silence than in lying. Nor do I doubt but clean stomachs will be better satisfied

^m Exod. xxii. 12.

ⁿ [Hist. chap. 2. The cases of the words are slightly altered to suit the sense.]

A.D. 201. with one drop of the milk of truth, than soul feeders (who must have their bellies full) with a trough of wash, mingled with the water of fabulous inventions. If any hereafter shall light on more history of these times, let them not condemn my negligence, whilst I shall admire their happiness.

THE FOURTH CENTURY.

TO THEOPHILUS BIDULPH OF LONDON, ESQ.^a

Of all shires in England, Staffordshire was (if not the soonest) the largest sown with the seed of the church, I mean, the blood of primitive martyrs, as by this century doth appear. I could not therefore dedicate the same to a fitter person than yourself, whose family hath flourished so long in that county, and whose favours have been so great unto your thankful friend,

T. F.

ARK and tempestuous was the morning of this century, which afterward cleared up to be a fair day. It began with great affliction to God's saints. The Spirit saith to the church of Smyrna, Ye shall have tribulation ten days^b. This is commonly understood of the ten general persecutions over all the Christian world. But herein Divine mercy magnified itself towards this island, that the last œcumencial was the first provincial persecution in Britain. God, though he made our church his darling, would not make it a wanton; she must taste of the rod with the rest of her sisters. The fiery trial^c spoken of by the apostle, now found out even those which by water were divided from the rest of the world. This tenth persecution, as it was the last, so it was the greatest of all, because Satan the shorter his reign, ^a [Biddulph. Arms, argent an eagle displayed sable.] ^b Rev. ii. 10. ^c 1 Pet. iv. 12.

A.D. 303.
First persecution in Britain
under Dio-cletian.

A.D. 303. the sharper his rage; so that what his fury lacks in the length, it labours to gain in the thickness thereof.

Alban the British St.
Stephen how a citizen of Rome.

2. In this persecution the first Briton which to heaven led the van of the noble army of martyrs, was Alban, a wealthy inhabitant of Verulam-castro, and a citizen of Rome^c; for so Alexander Neckham^d reports him.

Hic est martyrii roseo decoratus honore,
Albanus, cives, inclyta Roma, tuus.

Here Alban, Rome, thy citizen renown'd,
With rosy grace of martyrdom was crown'd.

None need stop, much less stumble at this seeming contradiction, easily reconciled by him that hath read St. Paul, in one place proclaiming himself an Hebrew of the Hebrews^e, and elsewhere pleading himself to be a Roman^f, because born in Tarsus a city of Cilicia and Roman colony; as Verulam-castro was at this time enfranchised with many immunities^g. Thus Alban was a Briton by parentage, a Roman by privilege; naturally a Briton, naturalized a Roman; and, which was his greatest honour, he was also citizen of that spiritual Jerusalem which is from above.

The manner of Alban's conversion.

3. His conversion happened on this manner. Amphibalus, a Christian preacher of Caerleon in Wales, “Ex illustri Romanorum ‘prosapia originem ducent,’ according to the ancient Anglo-Saxon life of him, translated into Latin by William Martell, himself a monk of St. Alban’s, of the order of Benedictines, and flourishing in the 12th century. This life has been published by the Bollandists in the Acta Sanctorum, June 22. T. v.

p. 149. See other authorities quoted by Usher, ib. 83, 84.)

^d In his poem on Verulam, quoted by Usher, Brit. Ecc. Ant. 76.

^e Philipp. iii. 5.

^f Acts xxii. 25.

^g (See Usher, ib. 76.)

was fain to fly from persecution into the eastern ^{A. D. 303.} parts of this island, and was entertained by Alban in his house in Verulam. Soon did the sparks of this guest's zeal catch hold on his host, and inflamed him with love to the Christian religion. Herein our Saviour made good his promise, He that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward^b. And the shot of Amphibalus his entertainment was plentifully discharged, in Alban's sudden and sincere conversion. Not long after, a search being made for Amphibalus, Alban secretly and safely conveyed him away, and exchanging clothes with him, offered himself for his guest to the pagan officers, who at that instant were a sacrificing to their devil-godsⁱ; where not only Alban, being required, refused to sacrifice, but also he reproved others for so doing, and thereupon was condemned to most cruel torments. But he conquered their cruelty with his patience: and though they tortured their brains to invent tortures for him, he endured all with cheerfulness; till rather their weariness than pity made them desist. And here we must bewail that we want the true story of this man's martyrdom, which impudent monks have mixed with so many improbable tales, that it is a torture to a discreet ear to hear them. However, we will set them down as we find them; the rather because we count it a thrifty way, first to glut the reader's belief with popish miracles, that so he may loathe to look or listen after them in the sequel of the history.

4. Alban being sentenced to be beheaded, much ^{The miracu-} people flocked to the place of his execution, which ^{lous mar-} ^{tyrdom of} ^{Alban.}

^b Matt. x. 41.

ⁱ Beda, H. E. i. 7.

A.D. 303. was on a hill, called Holm-hurst); to which they were to go over a river, where the narrow passage admitted of very few abreast. Alban being to follow after all the multitude, and perceiving it would be very late before he could come to act his part, and counting every delay half a denial, (who will blame one for longing to have a crown?) by his prayer obtained that the river, parting asunder, afforded free passage for many together. The corrupted copy of Gildas calls this river the ^aThames. But if the miracle were as far from truth as Thames from Verulam (being sixteen miles distant), it would be very hard to bring them both together. The sight hereof so wrought with him who was appointed to be his executioner, that he utterly refused the employment, desiring rather to die with him or for him, than to offer him any violence. Yet soon was another substituted in his place: for some cruel Doeг will quickly be found to do that office which more merciful men decline.

I understand it so called afterwards in the time of the Saxons. [Or rather, Holyn-hurst, as it is found in a copy of Tinmouth preserved in the Lambeth library. See Smith's note on Bede, i. 7, and some remarks upon the word in Usher, ib. 87. There would be no absurdity in retaining the word Thamesia, (although according to Usher it is generally omitted in all the accounts of the sufferings of St. Alban) in the passage of Gildas, from whom this account of the martyrdom of St. Alban is derived, because Gildas nowhere mentions the place of the martyrdom of St. Alban, although Bede and other writers say that he suffered at Verulam. If however he was to be executed in the capital, and not in Verulam, it would rather appear that he should have been sent to York, if, as some of the best English antiquarians have thought. York was at that time the capital of Great Britain. See however Usher, ib. 79.

^b Thames is wanting in the manuscript Gildas, in Cambridge library. [Hist. c. viii.]

5. Alban at the last being come to the top of the A.D. 303.
 hill, was very dry, and desirous to drink. Wonder not that he being presently to taste of joys for evermore should wish for fading water. Sure he thirsted most for God's glory, and did it only to catch hold of the handle of an occasion to work a miracle, for the good of the beholders. For presently by his prayer he summoned up a spring to come forth on the top of the hill, to the amazement of all that saw it. Yet it moistened not his executioner's heart with any pity, who notwithstanding struck off the head of this worthy saint¹, and instantly his own eyes fell out of his head, so that he could not see the villainy which he had done. Presently after, the former convert-executioner, who refused to put Alban to death, was put to death himself, baptized, no doubt, though not with water, in his own blood. The body of Alban was afterwards plainly buried; that age knowing no other use of saint's dust, than to commit it to the dust, earth to earth, not acquainted with adoration and circumgestation of relics, as ignorant of the manner how, as the reason why, to do it. But some hundred years after king Offa disturbed the sleeping corpe of this saint, removing them to a more stately, though less quiet bed, enshrining them, as (God willing) shall be related hereafter^m.

6. Immediately followed the martyrdom of Am-^{Sept. 16.} phibalus, Alban's guest, and ghostly father, though the story of his death be encumbered with much ob-<sup>Amphiba-lus. Differing to Usher.]</sup> security. For first there is a query in his very name: why called Amphibalus? and how came this com-

¹ May 23. Aliter, June 22. [22d of June according to Bede, ib. 23d of May accord- ing to Usher.] ^m See Mat. Paris, Vita Offe secundi, p. 26.

A. D. 303. pounded Greek word to wander into Wales? except any will say, that this man's British name was by authors in after-ages so translated into Greek. Besides, the name speaks rather the vestment than the wearer, signifying a cloak wrapt or cast about, (Samuel was marked by such a mantle,) and it may be he got his name hence; as Robert Curt-hose, son to William the Conqueror, had his surname from going in such a garment. And it is worth our observing, that this good man passeth nameless in all authors till about 400 years since, when Jeffery Monmouth was his godfather, and first calls him Amphibalus, for reasons concealed from us, and best known to himself[■].

The cruel manner of his martyrdom.

7. But it matters not for words, if the matter were true, being thus reported. A thousand inhabitants of Verulam went into Wales to be further informed in the faith by the preaching of Amphibalus, who were pursued by a pagan army of their fellow-citizens, by whom they were overtaken, overcome, and murdered; save that one man only (like Job's messenger) who escaped of them to report the loss of the rest. And although every thing unlikely is not untrue, it was a huge drag-net, and cunningly cast, that killed all the fish in the river. Now these pagan Verolamians brought Amphibalus back again, and being within ken of their city, in the village called Redburn, three miles from Verulam, they cruelly put him to death. For making an incision in his belly, they took out his guts, and tying them A. D. 303. to a stake, whipped him round about it. All which he endured, as free from impatience as his persecutors from compassion. Thus died Amphibalus; and a writer^a born and named from that place reporteth, that in his days the two knives which stabbed him were kept in the church of Redburn^o. The heat and resplendent lustre of this saint's suffering wrought as the sunbeams, according to the capacity of the matter it met with, in the beholders, melting the waxen minds of some into Christianity, and obdurating the hard hearts of others with more madness against religion.

■ Usher, Ant. Brit. Eccl. 159=84. Nothing is to be found respecting his martyrdom in Gildas, Bede, or the Sarum breviary, or any of the ancient martyrologies. See Usher, ib. 84. The word amphibalus, or rather amphibulus, was used to denote the upper garment worn by monks or clerical persons. See the authorities quoted by Usher, ib. 281. Such is the expression in Gildas, p. 10. "Sub "sancti abbatis amphibalo."]

7. Tradition reports, that the stake he was tied to ^{Vain fan-} afterwards turned to a tree, extant at this very day^p, ^{cerning the} ^{stake of} ^{Amphi-} ^{balus.} and admired of many as a great piece of wonder, though (as most things of this nature) more in report than reality. That it hath green leaves in winter mine eyes can witness false; and as for its standing at a stay time out of mind, neither impaired nor improved in bigness, (which some count so strange,) be it reported to woodmen and foresters whether it be not ordinary. I think the wood of the tree is as miraculous as the water of the well adjoining is

^a Thomas Redburn, who wrote 1480. [According to Bale, Cent. vii. §. 94. But with more probability Usher places him forty years earlier. E.B. Antiq. p. 66. Wharton in his Anglia Sacra, I. 179, has published a Hist. Maj. Ecclesiae Wintoniensis, and in the preface to the same volume, p. xxvi. has given an account of this writer, with his usual skill and sagacity.]

^o [This is stated by Mat. Paris, who has incorporated part of the legend of St. Alban into his history, A. D. 1178. p. 136. ed. 1640. Rudbourne may also have stated it, but this part of his history is only in MS. His narrative is for the most part derived both in earlier and later portions from Matthew Paris.]

^p I mean anno 1643.

A. D. 303. medicinal, which fond people fetch so far; and yet a credulous drinker may make a cordial drink therew.

The martyrdom of another thousand Britons variously reported.

8. At the time of Amphibalus his martyrdom, another thousand of the Verulam citizens, being converted to Christ, were by command of the judges all killed in the same place⁹. A strange execution, if true, seeing John Rosse¹ of Warwick lays the scene of this tragedy far off, and at another time, with many other circumstances inconsistent with this relation; telling us how at Lichfield in Staffordshire this great multitude of people were long before slain by the pagans as they attended to the preaching of Amphibalus. This relation is favoured by the name of Lichfield, which in the British tongue signifies a Golgotha, or place besprewed with skulls². In allusion whereto, that city's arms are a field surcharged with dead bodies. He needs almost a miraculous faith to be able to remove mountains, yea, to make the sun stand still, and sometimes to go back, who will undertake to accord the contradictions in time and place between the several relators of this history.

Several places pretended to, and contended for the name of martyrdom.

9. The records of Winchester make mention of a great massacre, whereby at this time all their monks were slain in their church, whilst the Chronicle of Westminster challengeth the same to be done in their convent; and the history of Cambridge ascribeth it to the Christian students of that university, killed by their British persecutors. Whether this happened

⁹ Usher, de Brit. Ecol. 160=85.

¹ In his book of the bishops of Worcester, (quoted by Usher, ib. 84.)

² [Respecting the etymology of this name, see "The Ap-

"peral, &c." p. 70, in which Fuller has published a Latin letter, respecting the meaning of the word, from one of his Welsh correspondents.]

in any or all of these places I will not determine: A. D. 303.
 for he tells a lie, though he tells a truth, that peremptorily affirms that which he knows is but uncertain. Meantime we see, that it is hard for men to suffer martyrdom, and easy for their posterity to brag of their ancestors' sufferings; yea, who would not entitle themselves to the honour when it is parted from the pain? When persecution is a coming, every man posteth it off, as the Philistines did the ark infected with the plague, and no place will give it entertainment^t. But when the storm is once over, then (as seven cities contended for Homer's birth in them) many places will put in a claim to share in the credit thereof.

10. Besides Amphibalus, suffered Aaron and Julius, two substantial citizens of Caerleon, and then Socrates and Stephanus, forgotten by our British writers, but remembered by foreign authors, and Augulius, bishop of London, then called Augusta^u. Besides these, we may easily believe many more went the same way; for such commanders-in-chief do not fall without common soldiers about them. It was superstition in the Athenians to build an altar to the unknown God^v; but it would be piety in us here to erect a monument in memorial of these unknown martyrs, whose names are lost. The best is, God's calendar is more complete than man's best martyrologies; and their names are written in the book of life, who on earth are wholly forgotten.

11. One may justly wonder that the first four ^{The cause of the great}

^t 1 Sam. v.

^u [See Usher, ib. p. 89, 90. Aaron and Julius on the 1st of July, Socrates and Stephanus on the 17th of September, Augulius on the 7th of February the next year.]

^v Acts xvii. 23.

A.D. 303. hundred years of the primitive church in Britain, silence of the primitive
 times. being so much observable, should be so little observed, the pens of historians writing thereof seeming starved for matter in an age so fruitful of memorable actions. But this was the main reason thereof, that living in persecution (that age affording no Christians idle spectators, which were not actors on that sad theatre) they were not at leisure to do, for suffering. And as commonly those can give the least account of a battle who were most engaged in it, (their eyes the while being turned into ~~armies~~, their seeing into fighting,) so the primitive confessors were so taken up with what they endured, they had no vacation largely to relate their own or others' sufferings. Of such monuments as were transmitted to posterity, it is probable most were martyred by the tyranny of the pagans: nor was it to be expected, that those who were cruel to kill the authors, would be kind to preserve their books.

A.D. 304.
 Constant.
 Chlorus gives the Christians
 peace. 12. Afterwards it pleased God to put a period to his servants' sufferings, and the fury of their enemies^w. For when Diocletian and Maximian had laid down the ensigns of command, Constantius Chlorus was chosen emperor in these western provinces of France, Spain, and Britain^x, whose carriage towards Christians Eusebius thus describeth: τοις ἐπ' αὐτῷ θεοτοκοῖς ἀβλαβεῖς φελάγει, "that he preserved such religious people as were under his command without any hurt or harm." So that under him the church in these parts had a breathing-time from persecution. But I am afraid that that learned pen^y goes a little too far, who makes him A.D. 305. founder of a bishopric at York, and styleth him “an emperor surpassing in all virtue and Christian piety:” seeing the latter will hardly be proved, that Constantius was a thoroughpaced Christian, except by our Saviour’s argument, He that is not against us is on our part^z. And Constantius did this good to Christianity, that he did it no harm: and not only so, a privative benefactor to piety, but positive thus far, that he permitted and preserved those who would rebuild the decayed Christian churches. But the greatest benefaction which he bestowed on Christians was, that he was father to Constantine. Thus as physicians count all sudden and violent alterations in men’s bodies dangerous, especially when changing from extremes to extremes, so God in like manner adjudged it unsafe for his servants presently to be posted out of persecution into prosperity; and therefore he prepared them by degrees, that they might be better able to manage their future happiness, by sending this Constantius, a prince of a middle disposition betwixt pagan and Christian, to rule some few years over them.

^w See Usher, ab ipso, p. 13. Cf. de vita Constantini, lib. Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. viii. 1 c. 9, 11, and Orosius, viii. 25.

13. At York this Constantius Chlorus did die and ^{He dieth at} _{York.} was buried^a. And therefore Florilegus, or the flower-gatherer, as he calleth himself, (understand Matthew of Westminster,) did crop a weed instead of a flower, when he reports “that in the year 1283 the body of this Constantius was found at Caer-Custe-

^a Camden. Brit. in description of York, p. 573. [Camden does not speak upon this point from his own authority. See also Usher, ib. p. 39.]

^z Mark ix. 40.

^a As is witnessed by Hieronymus, in Chronico, [rather in his translation of the Chronicle of Eusebius, in an. 309. Hen. of Huntingdon, f. 176,] and Eutropius, Hist. x. 1.

A. D. 305. “nith^a in Wales, and honourably bestowed in the church of Caer-narvon by the command of king Edward the First^b.” Constantius dying, bequeathed the empire to Constantine, his eldest son by Helen his former wife; and the soldiers at York cast the purple robe upon him, whilst he wept, and put spurs to horse to avoid the importunity of the army, attempting and requiring so instantly to make him emperor: but the happiness of the

A. D. 307. state overcame his modesty. And whereas formerly

Feb. 27.

Christians for the peace they possessed were only tenants at will to the present emperor's goodness, this Constantine passed this peaceable estate to the Christians and their heirs, or rather, to the immortal corporation of God's church, making their happiness hereditary by those good laws which he enacted. Now because this assertion, that Constantine was a Briton by birth, meets with opposition, we will take some pains in clearing the truth thereof.

Worth the scrutiny to clear Constantine a Briton by birth.

14. Let none say, the kernel will not be worth the cracking, and so that Constantine were born, it matters not where he was born. For we may observe God's Spirit to be very punctual in registering the birthplaces of famous men: The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people, that this man was born there^c. And as David cursed mount Gilboa, where godly Jonathan got his death^d, so by the

^a That is, the city of Constantine. Matthew of Westminster, (Hist. p. 371,) merely states that the body of Constantius was found at Caernarvon near Snowdon, which place Camden conceives to be the same as Caer-custenith, or rather Caer-custent, the old town upon the ruins of which he supposes Caernarvon to have been built.

^b Yet Matthew of Westminster, under the year 305, states that Constantius died at York.

^c Compare Mr. Camden's Brit. in Caernarvonshire, p 535, with him in the description of York, p. 572. [And Usher, ib. p. 33.]

^d Psalm lxxxvii. 6.

^e 2 Sam. i. 21.

portion (though inverted) it follows, those A. D. 307.

blest and happy where saints take their handsel of breath in this world. Besides, he was not only one of a thousand, but of ~~rea~~ millions, who first turned the tide in the world, and not only quenched the fire, but turned the furnace of persecution, and enabled Christianity through the Roman emperor: fore no wonder if Britain be ambitious indeed zealous in holding, such a worthy to be er.

unanswerable evidence to prove the point ^{The main} ~~versy, that Constantine the Great was a~~ ^{argument} ~~to prove~~ ^{the point.} fetched from the panegyrist, (otherwise ~~menius Rhetor,~~) in his oration made to Constantine himself, but making therein an apostrophe; O fortunata, et nunc omnibus beatior terris, quæ Constantimum Cæsarem prima vidisti! "Britain, and blessed above all other lands, idst first behold Constantine Cæsar!" Twist irony with another thread, spun of the same beravit ille [pater Constantius] Britannias tu etiam nobiles, illic oriendo, fecisti: either Constantius did free the British from slavery, and you have ennobled them, ng thence your original." The same is by the writer of the life of St. Helen, mother of Constantine, written about the year of our Lord 313 English Saxon tongue^g: as also by Wiliam Malmesbury, Henry Huntingdon^h, John of

^g [ix. 9. ed. Livin. ^g end of St. Helena abridged by John Capgrave, and printed in his Legenda Sanctorum]
^h [Hist. f. 176.]

^s probably the le-

A. D. 307. Salisbury¹, and all other English writers. And lest any should object that these writing the history of their own country are too lightfingered to catch any thing (right or wrong) sounding to the honour thereof, many most learned foreign historians, Pomponius Laetus, Polydore Virgil, Beatus Rhenanus, Franciscus Balduinus, Onuphrius Panvinius, Casar Baronius, Anthony Possevini, and others concur with them, acknowledging Helen, Constantine's mother, a Briton, and him born in Britain².

Answers to the objections of the contrary party. 16. But whilst the aforesaid authors in prose softly rock the infancy of, yet little, Constantine the Great in Britain, and whilst others in verse (especially Joseph of Exeter³ and Alexander Neckam) sweetly sing lullabies unto him⁴, some learned men are so rough and uncivil as to overturn his cradle, yea, wholly deprive Britain of the honour of his nativity: whose arguments follow, with our answers unto them.

Object. 1. The panegyrist speaking how Britain first saw Constantine Casar, refers not to his ordinary life, but imperial lustre⁵. Britain beheld him not first a child, but first saw him Casar; not fetching thence his natural being, but honourable birth, first saluted Casar in Britain.

Ans. Even Lipsius (Britain's greatest enemy in this point) confesseth, that though Constantine was [Proleg. in Polyceraticum.]

¹ This subject has been discussed with his usual learning by Primate Usher, ib. 93 and 123. But the reference to William of Malmesbury is an oversight, unless Usher used some MS. of this author containing the passage in question, varying from the printed copy. Fuller refers also to this subject in his Holy War, i. § 4.]

² In Antiochensis sua, (quoted by Usher, ib. 94.)

³ See his Tetrastichon in bishop Usher de Brit. Eccles. primord. p. 76—6.

⁴ Joannes Lavincius not. in Panegyr. v. p. 331.

irst elected emperor in Britain, yet he was first A. D. 307. pronounced Cæsar in France, in the life and health of his father^o; (Cæsar was a title given to the heir apparent to the empire;) and therefore the words in the panegyrist, in their native construction, relate to his natural birth.

Object. 2. Constantine Porphyrogenetes, the Grecian emperor, about 700 years since, in his book of government^p which he wrote to his son, confesseth Constantine the Great to have been a Frank by his birth, whence learned Meursius collecteth him a Frenchman by his extraction.

Ans. It is notoriously known to all learned men, that the Greeks in that middle age (as the Turks at this very day) called all western Europeans Franks. Wherefore as he that calleth such a fruit of the earth grain (a general name) denieth not but it may be wheat, a proper kind thereof; so the terming Constantine a Frank doth not exclude him from being a Briton, yea strongly implieth the same, seeing no western country in Europe ever pretended unto his birth.

Object. 3. Bede, a grave and faithful author, makes no mention of Constantine born in Britain, who (as Lipsius marketh^q) would not have omitted a matter so much to the honour of his own nation.

Ans. By the leave of Lipsius, Constantine and Bede, though of the same country, were of several

^o Note in Admiranda, lib. iv. c. 11. [Antv. 1598.]

^p [De administrando Imperio, chap. 13. ed. Meursius, 1617.]

^q In his Epistle to Mr.

Camden. Non Bedas——ille antiquus et fidus an gloriæ gentis suæ non favet? [in Camdeni Epist. p. 67. ed. Smith; and Uaher, ib. p. 102.]

A. D. 307. nations. Bede being a Saxon, was little zealous to advance the British honour: the history of which church he rather toucheth than handleth, using it only as a porch to pass through it to the Saxon history. And Saxons in general had little skill to seek, and less will to find out any worthy thing in British antiquities, because of the known antipathy betwixt them.

Object. 4. Procopius¹ maketh Drepanum, a haven in Bithynia, (so called because there the sea runs crooked in form of a sickle,) to be the place where Constantine had his τροφεία, or first nursing, very near to his birth²; and Nicephorus Gregorius³ makes him born in the same country.

Ans. The former speaks not positively, but with φασὶ, "men say so," reporting a popular error. The latter is a late writer, living under Andronicus junior, anno 1340, and therefore not to be believed before others more ancient.

Object. 5. But Julius Firmicus⁴, contemporary with Constantine himself, an author above exception, maketh this Constantine to be born at Naissus (in printed books Tharsus) a city of Dacia.

Ans. An excellent critic⁵ hath proved the printed copies of Firmicus to be corrupted, and justified it out of approved manuscripts, that not Constantine the Great the father, but Constantine the younger.

¹ De rebus Justiniani [lib. v. p. 46. ed. Horschel. 167.]

² Ήπειρ τὰ τροφεῖα Κωνσταντίνου. Upon which passage see Usher, lib. 194.]

³ Evidently an error for Nicephorus Callistius. See his Hist. Eccl. vii. 18. and viii. 2.

ed. Paris, 1630, nothing of the kind is to be found in Gregorius, as far as I can discover.]

⁴ [Mathes. i. 4. p. 14. ed. 1551.]

⁵ Camden in his letter to Lipsius, printed in Usher de Eccl. Brit. p. 185 = 100. (and in Camden's Epist. p. 65.)

his son, was intended by Firmicus born in that A.D. 307. place.

Thus we hope we have cleared the point with ingenuous readers in such measure as is consistent with the brevity of our history. So that of this Constantine (a kind of outward saviour in the world to deliver people from persecution) we may say, with some allusion to the words of the Prophet^u, (but with a humble reservation of the infinite distance betwixt the persons,) AND THOU BRITAIN ART NOT THE MEANEST AMONG THE KINGDOMS OF EUROPE, FOR OUT OF THEE DID COME A GOVERNOR, WHICH DID RULE THE ISRAEL OF GOD, GIVING DELIVERANCE AND PEACE TO THE SAINTS.

17. Now see what a pinch Verstegan^v (whose Mr. Fox defended against the cavils of Verstegan. teeth are sharpened with the difference of religion) gives Mr. Fox: "What is it other than an absurdity "for an English author to begin his epistle (to a "huge volume^w) with Constantine, the great and "mighty emperor, the son of Helen, an English "woman, &c. Whereas," saith he, "in truth St. "Helen, the mother of Constantine, was no English "woman, but a British woman." And yet Fox his words are capable of a candid construction, if by English women we understand (by a favourable prolepsis) one born in that part of Britain which since hath been inhabited by the English. Sure in the same dialect St. Alban hath often been called the first martyr of the English by many writers of good esteem. Yea the Breviary of Sarum^x, allowed and

^u Micah v. 2.

Acts and Monuments.

^v In his Epistle to this nation [prefixed to his Restoration of decayed intelligence].

^x In officio sancti Albani. [Concerning this office in the Breviary, see Usher, ib. 78.]

^w He meaneth his Books of

A.D. 307. confirmed no doubt by the infallible church of Rome, greets St. Alban with this salute :

Ave, proto-martyr Anglorum,
Miles regis angelorum,
O Albane, flos martyrum.

Sure Helen was as properly an English woman as Alban an English man, being both British in the rigid letter of history, and yet may be interpreted English in the equity thereof. Thus it is vain for any to write books, if their words be not taken in a courteous latitude, and if the reader meets not his author with a pardon of course for venial mistakes, especially when his pen slides in so slippery a passage.

Three cities contested for Constantine born in them.

18. And now having asserted Constantine a Briton, we are engaged afresh in a new controversy betwixt three cities, with equal zeal and probability, challenging Constantine to be theirs by birth : London¹, York², and Colchester³. We dare define nothing, not so much out of fear to displease, (though he that shall gain one of these cities his friend shall make the other two his foes by his verdict,) but chiefly because little certainty can be pronounced in a matter so long since, and little evident. Let me refresh myself and the reader with relating and applying a pleasant story. Once at the burial of St. Telian, second bishop of Landaff, three places did strive to have the interring of his body : Pen-

¹ William Fitzstephens in the description of London, p. 7. &c. published at the end of Stowe's Survey of London, 1633.]

² Oratores Regis Anglorum in the Council Constant. (See Uaber, ib. 13. 95.)

³ Camden's Brit. in Essex, [p. 325.]

nalun, where his ancestors were buried, Lan-Teilau- A.D. 307.
 vawr, where he died, and Landaff, his episcopal see. Now after prayer to God to appease this contention in the place where they had left him, there appeared suddenly three hearses, with three bodies so like, as no man could discern the right ^b: and so every one taking one, they were all well pleased. If by the like miracle, as there three corpses of Teliau encoffined, so here three child-Constantines encradled might be represented, the controversy betwixt these three cities were easily arbitrated, and all parties fully satisfied. But seriously to the matter. That which gave occasion to the varieties of their claims to Constantine's birth may probably be this, that he was born in one place, nursed in another, and perchance, being young, bred in a third. Thus we see our Saviour, though born in Bethlehem, yet was accounted a Nazarite, of the city of Nazareth, where he was brought up: and this general error took so deep impression in the people, it could not be removed out of the minds and mouths of the vulgar.

19. Constantine being now peaceably settled in A.D. 312.
 the imperial throne, there followed a sudden and <sup>Peace and prosperity restored to the church
by Constantine.</sup> general alteration in the world; persecutors turning patrons of religion. O the efficacy of a godly emperor's example, which did draw many to a conscientious love of Christianity, and did drive more to a civil conformity thereunto! The gospel, formerly a forester, now became a citizen; and leaving the woods, wherein it wandered, hills and holes, where it hid itself before, dwelt quietly in populous places. The stumps of ruined churches lately destroyed by Diocletian grew up into beautiful buildings; ora-

^b Godwin, [de Praesul. p. 592.]

A.D. 313. tories were furnished with pious ministers, and they provided of plentiful maintenance, through the liberality of Constantine. And if it be true what one relates, that about this time, when the church began to be enriched with means, there came a voice from heaven (I dare boldly say he that first wrote it never heard it, being a modern author¹) saying, "Now is " poison poured down into the church :" yet is there no danger of death thereby, seeing lately so strong an antidote hath been given against it. Nor do we meet with any particular bounty conferred by Constantine or Helen his mother on Britain, their native country, otherwise than as it shared now in the general happiness of all Christendom. The reason might be this: That her devotion most moved eastward towards Jerusalem, and he was principally employed far off at Constantinople, whither he had removed the seat of the empire, for the more convenience in the midst of his dominions. An empire herein unhappy, that as it was too vast for one to manage it entirely, so it was too little for two to govern it jointly, as in after-ages did appear.

A.D. 313. 20. And now just ten years after the death of St. Alban, a stately church was erected there and dedicated to his memory: as also the history of Winchester reporteth², that then their church first

¹ John Nauclerus president of Tubing university, anno 152. [This information Fuller has derived from John Bale, (Scriptor, p. 34), who, as is frequently the case with him, has misrepresented the passage. The words of Nauclerus are as follows: "Quod vero donante Constantino temporalia ec-

" clesiae Romanae, voti auditu
" refertur hujusmodi, hodie
" venenum ecclesia est immo-
" sum, non bene quadrat, nam
" ecclesia temporalia ante Con-
" stantinum, " Chronie ii.
" p. 6, 3. ed. 1574.]
" ² MS. quoted by Usher,
ib. p. 82. See also Mat. of Westminster in an. 313.]

founded by king Lucius, and since destroyed, was A.D. 313.
 built anew, and monks (as they say) placed in it.
 But the most avouchable evidence of Christianity flourishing in this island in this age, is produced from the

Bishops representing Britain in the council of

i. ARLES in France, called to take cognizance of the A.D. 314.
 cause of the Donatists; where appeared for the The appearance of the British in foreign councils.
 British

1. Eborius bishop of York^e.
2. Restitutus bishop of London.
3. Adelfius bishop of the city called the colony of London^f, which some count Colchester,
 and others Maldon, in Essex.
4. Sacerdos a priest, both by his proper } Both of name and office. } the last
5. Arminius a deacon. } place.

ii. NICE in Bithynia, summoned to suppress Arianism, A.D. 325.
 and establishing an uniformity of the observation of Easter; to which agreed those of the church $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\beta\rho\pi\tau\alpha\iota\alpha\varsigma$ ^g.

iii. SARDIS in Thracia, called by Constantius and Con- A.D. 347.
 stans, sons to Constantine the Great; where the bishops of Britain concurred with the rest to condemn the Arians and acquit Athanasius^h.

^e See the several subscripts at the end of this council in Binnius. [Concil. i. 1430. ed. Labbe 1671.]

^f [Of this city called Colonia Londinensium, and the council of Arles, see Stillingfleet's Antiq. of the British Churches, p. 75.]

^g Eusebius de vita Constant. iii. 19.

^h Athanasius in the beginning of his second apology against the Arians, [i. p. 123. ed. 1698. It is doubtful whether the British bishops were present at the council of Sardis. Athanasius states

A.D. 359. iv. ARIMINUM on the Adriatic sea in Italy, a synod convoked by Constantius the emperor¹.

In this last council it is remarkable, that whereas the emperor ordered that provisions (and those very plentiful) of diet should be bestowed on the bishops there assembled, yet those of Aquitan, France, and Britain, preferred rather to live on their proper cost, than to be a burden to the public treasury¹. Only three British bishops, necessitated for want of maintenance, received the emperor's allowance: the refusal of the former, having enough of their own, being an act full of praise, as the latter's accepting a salary to relieve their want, a deed free from censure. Collect we hence, 1. That there were many British bishops in this council, though their names and number are not particularly recorded. 2. That the generality of British bishops had in this age plentiful maintenance, who could subsist of themselves so far off in a foreign country: whereas lately in the council of Trent many Italian bishops, though in a manner still at home, could not live without public contribution. But there was good reason why the British were loath to accept the emperor's allowance, though otherwise it had been neither manners nor discretion for prelates to refuse a prince's proffer, because as Daniel and the children of the captivity preferred their pulse before the fare of king Nebumerely that they, in conjunction with others, subscribed the decretes in his favour. — re aduersarij, non adversarij. — See however Usher, p. 135.

{Of this council, and the conduct of the British bishops there present, we have Anton, p. 1, 2, and Stillingfleet, ibid. p. 2.

in p. 175
Sulpitius Severus, Hist.
Sicca (n. 36)

1 Jan 18

chadnezzar, for fear they should be defiled with his A.D. 359. (though princely, yet) pagan diet, so these bishops did justly suspect, that Constantius the emperor, being an Arian, had a design to bribe their judgments by their palates, and by his bounty to buy their suffrages to favour his opinions. In very deed this synod is justly taxed, not that it did bend, but was bowed to Arianism, and being overborne by the emperor, did countenance his poisonous positions^m.

21. Hitherto the church in Britain continued A.D. 360. <sup>Britain beginneth to be tainted with Arian-
ism.</sup> sound and orthodox, in no degree tainted with Arianism; which gave the occasion to St. Hilary in his epistle to his brethren and fellow-bishops of Germany and Britain, &c., though he himself was in Phrygia in banishment, to solace his soul with the consideration of the purity and soundness of religion in their countriesⁿ. But now, alas! the gangrene of that heresy began to spread itself into this island; so that what the Jews of Thessalonica said unjustly of St. Paul and his followers, the Britons might too truly affirm of Arius and his adherents, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also^o. Hear how sadly Gildas complaineth; Mansit namque hæc Christi capitis membrorumque consonantia suavis, donec Arriana perfidia atrox, ceu anguis transmarina nobis evomens venena, fratres in unum habitantes exitiabiliter faceret sejungi, &c.^p So that the words of Athanasius, totus mundus Arrianizat, were true also of this peculiar or divided world of Britain. Naturalists dispute how wolves had their

^m Episcopi in Arianum dogma fuerant subacti, oppri- mente Constantio. Facundus, de tribus Capitulis, v. [3. p. 72. ed. 1679.]

ⁿ Dedicating unto them his book De Synodis. ^o Acts xvii. 6. ^p [Hist. chap. ix. Bede i. 8.]

A.D. 360. first being in Britain; it being improbable that merchants would bring any such noxious vermin over in their ships, and impossible that of themselves they should swim over the sea: (which hath prevailed so far with some, as to conceive this, now an island, originally annexed to the continent:) but here the query may be propounded, how these heretics (*mystical wolves not sparing the flock*⁹) first entered into this island. And indeed we meet neither with their names, nor manner of transportation hither, but only with the cursed fruit of their labours. And it is observable, that immediately after that this kingdom was infected with Arianism, the pagan Picts and Scots out of the north made a general and desperate invasion of it¹. It being just with God, when his vineyard beginneth to bring forth wild grapes, then to let loose the wild boar, to take his full and free repast upon it².

A.D. 379.
Maximus usurping the empire expelleth the Scots out of Britain.

22. In this woeful condition, vain were the complaints of the oppressed Britons for assistance unto Gratian and Valentinian the Roman emperors, who, other ways employed, neglected to send them succour. This gave occasion to Maximus, a Spaniard by birth³, (though accounted born in this island by

⁹ Acts xx. 29.

¹ Ammianus Marcellinus in the beginning of his twentieth book maketh this eruption to happen anno 360, which continued many years after. (See Usher, ab. 3rd. 327.)

² Of this charge of Arianism thus brought against the early British church, see Stillingfleet, ib. p. 145. The whole imputation rests however upon the obscure passage of Gildas quoted in the text, which has been transcribed by Bede into his Ecclesiastical History. Usher attributes the diffusion of Arianism into this part of the world to Valentinian, who in the year 362 declared himself a patron of the Arian heresy.

³ Zosim. Histor. (iv. 35. or p. 247. ed. Onom. 1679.)

our homebred authors^u,) to be chosen emperor of A.D. 382. the west of Europe by a predominant faction in his army, who for a time valiantly resisted the Scots and Picts, which cruelly invaded and infested the south of Britain. For these nations were invincible, whilst, like two arms of the same body, they assisted each other; but when the Picts (the right arm being most strong and active) suffered themselves to be quietly bound up by the peace concluded, the Scots^v, as their own authors confess^x, were quickly conquered and dispersed. But Maximus, whose main design was not to defend Britain from enemies, but confirm himself in the empire, sailed over with the flower of the British nation into France; where, having conquered the natives in Armorica, he bestowed the whole country upon his soldiers, from them named at this day Little Britain^y.

23. But Ireland will noways allow that name unto A.D. 383. Britain in it, pleading itself to be anciently called the Lesser France Britain, in authentic authors^z: and therefore this ^{when con-}quered, and French Britain must be contented to bear that ^{why so} called. name, with the difference of the third brother, except any will more properly say, that the French

^u Gildas, [Hist. chap. x. p. 4. But it is questionable whether Gildas means that he was born in Britain, or commenced, as was really the fact, his usurpation in this island.] H. Hunting. Hist. [i. p. 176 b. ed. 1596.] Galfrid. Monmouth, [fol. 37,] and before the three latter, Ethelwerdus, Chron. i. [p. 474. ed. 1596. Of Maximus, see Usher, ib. 106.]

^v [It is certainly more than probable that the Scots here mentioned were natives of Ireland, the cradle of what is now called Scotland. See Usher, ib. 310.]

^x John Fordun, Scoto-Chronic. ii. 54.

^y [See Gul. Malmesbur. de gestis Regum, f. 3. ed. 1596.]

^z Ptolemy calls it μερα βερραία, ii. 6. p. 31. ed. Græc. [I cannot find this passage in Ptolemy. Gale has collected the passages of this writer, which relate to England and Ireland, in his Scriptor. i. p. 735 sq.]

A.D. 383. Britain is the daughter of our Britain, which infant, when she asks her mother blessing, doth not jabber so strangely, but that she is perfectly understood by her parent. Although one will hardly believe what is generally reported, namely, that these French Britons were so ambitious to preserve their native language, that, marrying French women, they cut out their wives' tongues, for fear they should infect their children's speech with a mixture of French words^a. Here the Britons lived, and though they had pawned their former wives and children at home, they had neither the honesty nor affection to return thither to redeem the pledges left behind them. Strange that they should so soon forget their native soil^b. But as the lodestone, when it is rubbed over with the juice of onions, forgetteth its property to draw iron any longer, so though we allow an attractive virtue in one's own country, yet it loseth that alluring quality, when the said place of one's birth is steeped in a sad and sorrowful condition, as the state of Britain stood at this present. And therefore these travellers, having found a new habitation nearer the sun, and further from suffering, there quietly set up their rest.

A.D. 388. Maximus died in his march towards
Italy. 24. But not long after, Maximus marching towards Italy, was overcome and killed at Aquilegia^c. A prince not unworthy of his great name, had he been lifted up to the throne by a regular election, and not tossed up to the same in a tumultuous who is generally very accurate in his chronology, refers the death of Maximus to the year 388, but Fuller follows Usher, ib. p. 34.

^a Heylin's Geogr. in the description of France, (p. 93 ed. 1627) Such is the statement of Nennius, Hist. Brit. ch. viii.

^b Florence of Worcester.

manner. This makes St. Ambrose^c, Gildas, and A.D 388. other authors^d violently to inveigh against his memory, notwithstanding his many most honourable achievements. This difference we may observe betwixt bastards and usurpers: the former, if proving eminent, are much bemoaned, because merely passive in the blemish of their birth; whilst usurpers, though behaving themselves never so gallantly, never gain general good-will, because actually evil in their original, as it fared with Maximus, who, by good using, could never make reparation for his bad getting of the empire. Surely Britain had cause to curse him for draining it of her men and munition; so leaving it a trunk of a commonwealth, without head or hands, wisdom or valour, effectually to advise or execute any thing in its own defence^e; all whose strength consisted in multitudes of people,

^c Orat. de obitu Theodosii.
[§. 39. II. p. 1209. ed. 1690.]

^d Sulpitius Severus, Dialog.
II. 7.

^e [The effect of these ambitious designs of Maximus, and of Constantius, who in the year 406 followed the same course, is strikingly told by William of Malmesbury. "Maximus homo aptus imperio si non contra fidem ad tyrannidem anhelasset, quasi ab exercitu impulsus purpuram induit, statimque in Galliam transitum parans, ex prvincia omnem pene militem abravit. Constantinus etiam quidam non multo post ibidem spe nominis imperator electus, quicquid residuum erat militaris roboris exhaussit. Sed alter a Theodosio,

" alter ab Honorio interfecti, " rebus humanis ludibrio fu- " erunt. Copiarum quæ illos " ad bellum secutæ fuerant, " pars occisa, pars post fugam " ad superiores Brittones con- " cessit. Ita cum tyranni nul- " lum in agris præter semibar- " baros, nullum in urbibus " præter ventri deditos reliquis- " sent, Britannia omni patro- " cinio militaris vigoris vidua- " ta, omni artium exercitio ex- " inanita, conterminarum gen- " tium inhiationi diu obnoxia " fuit." f. 3. See also Bede Eccl. Hist. i. 11. The superiores Britannos are the natives of Brittany. For Malmesbury uses the term superiores to distinguish the natives of the continent from this island.]

A.D. 388. where number was not so great a benefit as disorder was a burden: which encouraged the Picts (the truce expired) to harass all the land with fire and sword. The larger prosecution whereof we leave to the chronicles of the state, only touching it here by way of excuse for the brevity and barrenness of our ecclesiastical history, the sadness of the commonwealth being a just plea for the silence of the church.

A.D. 390. Frequent pilgrimages of the Britons to Jerusalem whilst St. Kebi lived quietly in Anglesey. 25. We conclude this century when we have told the reader, that about this time the fathers tell us⁴ how pilgrimages of the Britons began to be frequent as far as Jerusalem, there not only to visit Christ's sepulchre, but also to behold Simon Stilita a pious man, and Melania a devout woman, both residing in Syria, and at this time eminent for sanctity⁵. Perchance discontentment mingled with devotion moved the Britons to so long a journey, conceiving themselves, because of their present troubles at home, more safe any where else than in their own country. As for those Britons who in this age were zealous asserters of the purity of religion against the poison of Arianism, amongst them we find St. Kebi, a principal champion, son to Salomon duke of Cornwall, scholar to St. Hilary bishop of Poictiers in France, with whom he lived 50 years, and by whom, being made bishop, he returned first to St. David's, afterwards into Ireland, and at last fixed himself in the isle of Anglesey. So pious a man, that he might

⁴ Hieronymus [in Epist. 1033. Bib. Magna Vet. Pa-
Paul. et Eust. ad Marcel. tom. trum ed de la Bigne. 1654.]
L. p. 155. ep. 17. ed. Paris. ⁵ See Usher. ib. 109. 408.
1609.] Palladius Galata. Hist. 411.]
Lauziac. c. 119. [in t. XIII.

seem to have communicated sanctity to the place, A.D. 390. being a promontory into the sea, called from him Holyhead; (but in Welsh Caer-guiby :) as in the same island, the memory of his master is preserved in Hilary-point; where both shall be remembered, as long as there be either waves to assault the shore, or rocks to resist them.

THE FIFTH CENTURY.

TO THOMAS BIDE OF LONDON, ESQ.¹

Amongst your many good qualities, I have particularly observed your judicious delight in the mathematics. Seeing therefore this century hath so much of the surveyor therein, being employed in the exact dividing of the English shires betwixt the seven Saxon kingdoms, the proportions herein are by me submitted to your censure and approbation.

A.D. 401.

Pelagius a Briton by birth.

OW the Arian heresy, by God's Providence and good men's diligence, was in some measure suppressed, when the unwearied malice of Satan (who never leaveth off, though often changeth his ways to seduce souls) brought in a worse, because more plausible, heresy of Pelagianism. For every man is born a Pelagian, naturally proud of his power, and needeth little art to teach him to think well of himself. This Pelagius was a Briton by birth, (as we take no delight to confess it, ^{as} we will tell no lie to deny it,) as some say called Morgan^b, that is in Welsh, "near the sea," (and well had it been for the Christian world if he had been nearer the sea, and served therein as the Egyptians served the Hebrew males,) being to the same sense called in Latin Pelagius. Let no foreigner insult on A.D. 401. the infelicity of our land in bearing this monster; but consider first, if his excellent natural parts, and eminent acquired learning might be separated from his dangerous doctrine, no nation need be ashamed to acknowledge him. Secondly, Britain did but breed Pelagius, Pelagius himself bred his heresy, and in foreign parts where he travelled, France, Syria, Egypt, Rome itself, if not first invented, much improved his pestilent opinions. Lastly, as our island is to be pitied for breeding the person, so she is to be praised for opposing the errors of Pelagius. Thus the best father cannot forbid the worst son from being his child, but may debar him from being his heir, affording no favour to countenance his badness.

^a [Arms—Or, on a pile engrailed, az. three anchors of the field. B.]

* [Bede E. H. i. 1.]

^b Usher, de Brit. Eccl. Prim. p. 207 = 112; et Hen. Spelman in Concil. i. 46 (Wilkins Concil. IV. 712)

2. It is memorable what one relatesⁱ, that the same day whereon Pelagius was born in Britain, St. Augustine was also born in Afric; divine Pelagius no doctor of Cambridge, but a monk of Banchor. evidence so disposing it, that the poison and the antidote should be twins in a manner, in respect of the same time. To pass from the birth to the breeding of Pelagius; John Cajus^k, who observes eight solemn destructions of Cambridge before the conquest, imputeth that which was the third in order to Pelagius; who being a student there, and having his doctrine opposed by the orthodox divines, cruelly caused the overthrow and desolation of all the university. But we hope it will be accounted no point of Pelagianism for us thus far to improve our free-will, as to refuse to give credit hereunto till better authority be produced. And yet this sounds much to the commendation of Cambridge, that like a pure ⁱ Dempster, Hist. Scot. l. xv. §. 1012. ^k Hist. Cantab. p. 28.

A.D. 401. crystal glass, it would prefer rather to fly a pieces and be dissolved, than to endure poison put into it, according to the character which John Lidgate, a wit of those times, gave of the university :

Of heresy Cambridge bare never blame¹.

More true it is that Pelagius was bred in the monastery of Banchor, in that part of Flintshire which at this day is a separatist from the rest, where he lived with two thousand monks, industrious in their callings, whose hands were the only benefactors for their bellies; abbey labourers, not abbey lubbers, like their successors in after-ages, who, living in laziness, abused the bounty of their patrons to riot and excess.

The principal errors of Pelagius. 3. Infinite are the deductions and derived consequences of Pelagius his errors.

These are the main :

1. That a man might be saved without God's grace by his own merits and freewill.
2. That infants were born without original sin, and were as innocent as Adam before his fall.
3. That they were baptized not to be freed from sin, but thereby to be adopted into the kingdom of God.
4. That Adam died not by reason of his sin, but by the condition of nature; and that he should have died albeit he had not sinned.

Here to recount the learned works of fathers written, their pious sermons preached, passionate epistles sent, private conferences entertained, public disputations held, provincial synods summoned,

¹ In his poem of Cambridge, (quoted in Twyne's Antiq. Acad. Oxon. p. 14.)

general councils called, wholesome canons made to A. D. 401. confute and condemn these opinions, under the name of Pelagius, or his scholar Cœlestius, would amount to a volume fitter for a porter's back to bear, than a scholar's brains to peruse. I decline the employment, both as over painful, and nothing proper to our business in hand, fearing to cut my fingers if I put my sickle into other men's corn, these things being transacted beyond the seas, and not belonging to the British history. The rather, because it cannot be proved that Pelagius in person ever dispersed his poison in this island, but ranging abroad, (perchance because this false prophet counted himself without honour in his own country,) had his emissaries here, and principally Agricola, the son of Severian a bishop^m.

4. It is incredible how speedily and generally the A. D. 420. infection spread by his preaching, advantaged ^{French bi-} ^{shops sent} ^{for to sup-} ^{press Pelagianism in} ^{Britain.} no doubt by the ignorance and laziness of the British bishops in those days, none of the deepest divines or

^m Bede E. H. i. 17. [Pelagius first endeavoured to pave the way for his heresy in his letter to Paulinus bishop of Nola in the year 405. (Usher, ib. p. 111.) Pelagius was dead by the year 420 (Id. p. 166.), but his heresy was promoted, especially in the west, by his disciples Cœlestius and Julianus, and in this island by Agricola (Bede, Eccl. Hist. i. 17.) The dissemination of these errors by Agricola is referred by Florence of Worcester to the year 429, in which year he also places the mission of Germanus and Lupus, and their successful efforts in restoring this island to its orthodox and primitive faith. From the words of Bede, Hist. Eccl. i. 17, it clearly appears that the Pelagian heresy was checked in its early stage in this island, which renders the account of the rapid success of Germanus and Lupus the more probable, though scarcely consistent with the expression of some writers, who have represented it as if the whole island had been infected by Pelagianism. See those quoted by Usher, ib. 172.]

A.D. 420. most learned clerks, as having little care, and less comfort to study, living in a distracted state; and those that feel practical discords will have little joy to busy themselves with controversial dignity. However, herein their discretion is to be commended, that finding their own forces too feeble to encounter so great a foe, they craved the assistance of foreigners out of France, and sent for Germane, bishop of Auxerre, and Lupus, bishop of Troyes, not being of their envious and proud disposition, who had rather suffer a good cause to fall, than to borrow supporters to hold it up, lest thereby they disgrace themselves, confessing their own insufficiency, and preferring the ability of others. The two bishops cheerfully embraced the employment, and undertook the journey, no whit discouraged with the length of the way, danger of the sea, and badness of the winter; seeing all weather is fair to a willing mind, and opportunity to do good is the greatest preferment which a humble heart doth desire. This Lupus was brother to Vincentius Lirinensis⁶, husband to Pimeniola, the sister of Hilary, archbishop of Arles⁷; one of such learning and sanctity, that a grave author of those times styleth him a father of fathers, and bishop of bishops, yea, another James of that age⁸. And yet in this employment he was but a second to Germane the principal; and both of them, like Paul and Barnabas, jointly advanced the design⁹.

⁶ Eucherius de laude Eremi ad Hilarium, § 42. T. vi. 866 Bib. Max. Patr. Lond. 1652.

⁷ Eucher de Brie Eccl. Princ. 1. p. 225. 1725.

⁸ Salomon. vii. ep. p. 135

⁹ ed. Sirmondi 1652.

They were sent over by pope Celestine at the instigation of Palladius. Diaconus Flot. Wigorn. 161.

5. Coming into Britain, with their constant labours A. D. 429. they confirmed the orthodox, and reclaimed the erroneous, preaching openly in fields and highways^r. As the king's presence makes a court, so theirs did a church, of any place; their congregation being bounded with no other walls than the preacher's voice, and extending as far as he could intelligibly be heard. As for their formal disputation with the Pelagian doctors, take it from the pen of Bede and mouth of Stapleton translating him^s.

6. “The authours and head professours of hereticall error lay lurking all this while, and like the wicked sprites, much spighted to see the people daily to fall from them. At length, after long advisement used, they taketh upon them to try the matter by open disputation; which being agreed upon, they come forth richly appointed, gorgiously apparaled, accompanied with a number of flattering favours, having leifer^t to commit their cause to open dis- putting, then to seem to the people, whom they had subverted, to have nothing to say in defence thereof. Thether resorted a great multitude of people with their wives and childeeren. The people was present both to see and judge the matter: the parties there were farre unlike of condition. In the one side was the Faith, on the other man's Presumption; on the one side Meeknesse, on the other Pride; on the one side Pelagius, on the other Christ. First of all the blessed priest Germanus of Stapleton's words, take it with all the printer's faults, done probably by an outlandish press.

^r Per trivia, per rura, [per devia.] [Bede, E. H. ib.]

^s [Stapleton's Translation of Bede, p. 25, b. ed. 1565.]

^t Not presuming to alter any

A.D. 429. " and Lupus gave their adversaries leave to speak. " which vainly occupied both the time and ears of " the people with naked words. But after the " reverend Bishops poured out their flowing words, " confirmed with scriptures out of the Gospels and " Apostles, they joyned with their own words the " words of God; and after they had said their own " mind, they read other men's minds upon the same. " Thus the vanite of hereticks is convicted, and false- " hed is confuted; so that at every objection they " were forced in effect to confess their error, not " being able to answere them. The people had " much to do to keep their hands from them, yet " shewed their judgement by their clamours."

Many re-markables in this disputation.

7. A conference every way admirable. First, in the opponents, who came forth gallantly, as antedating the conquest, and bringing the spoils of their victory with them. But gay clothes are no armour for a combat. Secondly, in the defendants of the truth, appealing to no unwritten traditions, but to the scriptures of the Gospels and Apostles; because the point of grace controverted appeared most plainly in the New Testament. Thirdly, in the auditors, or, as they are called, the judges, men, women, and children. Wonder not at this feminine auditory, seeing they were as capable of the antidote as of the poison: and no doubt the Pelagians had formerly (as other hereticks) *crept into houses to reduce silly women*¹, and therefore now the plaster must be as broad as the sore. As for children, we know who it was that said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not. &c.² But here,

¹ 2 Tim. iii. 6.

² Matt. xix. 14. In Latin, not pueri, but liberi.

though called children in relation to their parents, A.D. 429. they might be in good age and capacity of understanding; or if they were little ones indeed, flocking out of fashion in a general concourse to see these men speak divine mysteries, they could not hereafter, when grown old, date their remembrance from a more remarkable epoch. See we here that in these times the laity were so well acquainted with God's word, that they could competently judge what was or was not spoken in proportion thereunto. Lastly and chiefly, in the success of this conference. For though generally such public disputations do make more noise than take effect, (because the obstinate maintainers of error come with their tongues tipt with clamorousness, as their proselyte auditors do with ears stopped with prejudice,) yet this meeting, by God's blessing, was marvellously powerful to establish and convert the people. But here a main difficulty is by authors left wholly untouched, namely, in what language this conference was entertained and managed, that Germanus and Lupus, two French bishops, and foreigners, could both speak with fluency, and be understood with facility. Perchance the ancient Gauls in France, whence these bishops came, spake still (as they did anciently) one and the selfsame tongue with the Britons, differing rather in dialect than language^v; or, which is more probable, both France and Britain, remaining as yet Roman provinces, spake a coarse vulgar Latin, though invaded with a mixture of many base words, as

^v [That such was the fact, at all events in the Saxon times, is plain; for otherwise St. Augustine, when on his mission to this island, would scarcely have taken his interpreters from France. See Bede, E. H. i. 25.]

A.D. 439. Britain especially, now or near this time, was infested with foreign barbarous nations.

St. Alban's
the place of the conference. 8. This conference was held at St. Alban's, even where at this day a small chapel is extant to the honour of St. German, though Hector Boëthius^{*} assigns London the place; adding moreover, that such obstinate Pelagians as would not be reclaimed, were, for their contumacy, burnt by the king's officers. But it will be hard to find any spark of fire in Britain or elsewhere, employed on heretics in this age. We may observe, that the aforesaid Hector Boëthius and Polydore Virgil, (writing the chronicles, the one of Scotland, the other of England, at the same time,) as they bear the poetical names of two sons of Priamus, so they take to themselves much liberty of fancy and fiction in their several histories.

Germanus
marcheth against the pagan Picts
and Saxons. 9. Not long after, the aid of Germanus and Lupus was implored, and employed an hundred miles off in another service, against the pagan Picts and Saxons. Here we meet with the first mention of Saxons, being some straggling volunteers of that nation, coming over to pillage here of their own accord, not many years before they were solemnly invited hither under Horsus and Hengistus, their generals. Germanus, after the Lent well spent, in the fasting of their bodies and feasting of their souls, (for the people had daily sermons[†].) and the solemnity of Easter festival duly celebrated, wherein he christened multitudes of pagan converts in the river Alen[‡], marched with an army of them, whilst their baptismal water was scarce wiped from their bodies, against the aforesaid enemies, whom he found in the ^{A.D. 429.} north-east of Wales. Here the pious bishop, turning politic engineer, chose a place of advantage, being a hollow dale surrounded with hills, near the village called at this day by the English Mold, by the British Guid-cruc, in Flintshire, where the field at this day retains the name of Maes Garmony, or German's Field; the more remarkable, because it hath escaped (as few of this note and nature) the exact observation of master Camden^z.

* Scot. Hist. lib. viii. {p. 145. b.}

† Bede, E. H. i. 20.
‡ [In Flintshire.]

10. Here Germanus placed his men in ambush, with instructions, that at a signal given they should all shout Hallelujah three times with all their might, ^{A victory gotten not by shooting, but shouting.} which was done accordingly. The pagans were surprised with the suddenness and loudness of such a sound, much multiplied by the advantage of the ^y Uasher de Brit. Ecc. Primum. p. 333=179.

^z [From the absence of authentic materials, this portion of British history is involved in hopeless confusion. Nennius, one of the principal authorities, (for Bede has given only a cursory account of the period,) is so completely corrupted and interpolated, his chronology so confused, as to defy all attempts at arrangement, and furnish no clue for reducing the contradictory statements of our chroniclers into harmony and consistency. By Nennius the reign of Vortigern is placed about the year 440 (Hist. Brit. xxviii.), the reception of Hengist and Horsa in 447, and the mission of Germanus about the same period. But according to Bede, the mission of Germanus took place some years before the arrival of the Saxons, (Eccl. Hist. i. 17.), probably in 429 (see Flor. Wigorn. in 429,) and the arrival of the Saxons in 450 (Eccl. Hist. i. 15. Flor. Wigorn. in 450); and yet Bede speaks of the defeat of the combined forces (Saxones Pictique—junctis viribus) of the Picts and the Saxons by Germanus in this first mission, and not as if these Saxons were, as Fuller has represented, "some straggling volunteers." The authority of later chroniclers upon this topic is of little value, their narratives though sometimes woven together with much seeming consistency, (such as Matthew of Westminster,) having been derived from the legendary tales of Geoffrey of Monmouth.]

A.D. 429. echo, whereby their fear brought in a false list of their enemies' number; and rather trusting their ears than their eyes, they reckoned their foes by the increase of the noise rebounded unto them; and then allowing two hands for every mouth, how vast was their army! But besides the concavity of the valleys improving the sound, God sent a hollowness into the hearts of the pagans, so that their apprehensions added to their ears, and cowardice often resounded the same shout in their breasts, till beaten with the reverberation thereof, without striking a stroke, they confusedly ran away, and many were drowned for speed in the river Alen, lately the Christians' font, now the pagans' grave. Thus a bloodless victory was gotten, without sword drawn, consisting of no fight, but a fright and a flight; and that hallelujah, the song of the saints after conquest achieved^a, was here the forerunner and procurer of victory. So good a grace it is to be said both before and after a battle. Gregory the Great (a grave author) in his Comment upon Job^b, makes mention of this victory, occasioned on those words, Can any understand the noise of his tabernacle?

A.D. 410.
St. Alban's in Herts-fordshire, Cahene,
Ely, and Oswell, pretend to the whole body of St. Alban.

11. Germanus, now twice a conqueror, of Pelagians and pagans, prepares for his return, after first he had caused the tomb of St. Alban to be opened, and therein deposited the reliques of many saints which he brought over with him, conceiving it fit (as he said) that their corpses should sleep in the same grave, whose souls rested in the same heaven^c. In lieu of what he left behind him, exchange is no robbery.

^a Rev. xix. 1.

Gregory quoted by Usher.

^b Chap. xxxvi. 29. 32. 179.

[See the other passages of St. [Bede, E. H. i. 18.]

he carried along with him some of St. Alban's dust, A.D. 430. wherein spots of the martyr's blood were as fair and fresh as if shed but yesterday^d. But what most concerns St. Alban's monks to stickle in, some report German to have carried the body of Alban to Rome, whence some hundred years after, the empress to Otho the Second brought it to Cologne, where, at this day, they maintain his uncorrupted body to be enshrined^e; the monks of Ely in Cambridgeshire pretending to the same, as also do those of Ottonium or Osell in Denmark. Thus, as Mettus Fuffetius the Roman was drawn alive by horses four ways, like violence is offered to the dead body of Alban, plucked to four several places by importunate competitors; only with this difference, that the former was mangled into quarters, whereas here each place pretends to have him whole and entire, not abating one hair of his beard^f: nor know I how to reconcile them, except any of them dare say, though without show of probability, that as the river in Paradise went out of Eden, from whence it was parted, and became into four heads^g, Alban in like manner, when dead, had the same quality, of one to be multiplied into four bodies.

12. Now after Germanus and Lupus were returned After the departure of Germanus, Pelagianism re-cruits in Britain. home into their native country, Pelagianism began to sprout again in Britain^h. An accident not so strange to him that considers how quickly an error much of kin thereunto grew up amongst the Galatians pre-

^d [See the authorities quoted in Usher, 176.] [Surius, ib.]

^e Surius, vita Sanct. Junii ^g Gen. ii. 10. ^h [Bede, Eccl. Hist. i. 21. 22. [T. iii. 233. ed. 1581.] Usher, ib. 204.]

^f "Caput enim cum barba,"

A.D. 430. gently on Paul's departure. I marrel (said he) that ye are so soon remored from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel! St. Paul's marvelling may make us marvel the less, seeing that wonder which hath a precedent is not so great a wonder. Here we may sadly behold the great proneness of men to go astray, whose hearts by nature cold in goodness, will burn no longer than A.D. 449. they are blown. To suppress this heresy, Germanus is solicited to make a second voyage into Britain, which he did accordingly, accompanied with his partner Severus, because Lupus his former companion was otherwise employed. Hereupon a prime poet^k of his age makes this apostrophe unto St. German:

Tuque O, cui toto discretos orbe Britannos
Bis penetrare datum, bis intima cernere magni Monstra maris:

O thou that twice pierced Britain, cut asunder
From the whole world, twice didst survey the wonder
Of monstrous seas.

The same success still followed, and this conqueror, who formerly had broken and scattered the main body of the Pelagians, now routed the remnant, which began to rally and make head again^l.

Pelagianism and king Vortigern's incestuous marriage condemned in a synod.

18. He also called a synod, wherein those damnable doctrines were condemned^m; as also the incestuous marriage of Vortigern king of Britain, (a wicked prince, in whom all the dregs of his vicious ancestors were settled,) who had took his own

^l Gal. 5. 6.

^k Eriensis Antisiodorensis in vita S. Germani, [iv. 3. §. 118.
Acta SS. die 21 Julii, T. vii.

p. 243 ed. Bolland.]

^l Bede, E. H. i. 21.

^m Mat. West. in anno 449.

daughter to wifeⁿ. And yet of this unlawful copulation a pious son, St. Faustus, was born; to shew that no crossbar of bastardy, though doubled with incest, can bolt grace out of that heart wherein God will have it to enter. Germanus having settled Britain in good order, went back to his own country, where presently upon his return he died, as God useth to send his servants to bed when they have done all their work: and by God's blessing on his endeavours, that heresy was so cut down in Britain, that it never generally grew up again^o.

14. Meantime the south of this island was in a woeful condition, caused by the daily incursions of the Picts. As for the Picts' wall built to restrain them, it being a better limit than fortification, served rather to define than defend the Roman empire; and useless is the strongest wall of stone when it hath stocks only upon it: such was the sottish laziness of the Britons to man it, a nation at this time

In vain the Britons petition to the Roman emperor for help against the Picts.

ⁿ Nennius, c. [xxxviii. Gildas, p. 11. Usher, ib. 206.]

^o [St. Germanus died at Ravenna, on a mission to Aetius in behalf of the people of Brittany (Bede, E. H. i. 21.) It appears that he did not leave this island till the latter years of his life. There are two calculations respecting the date of his arrival and stay in the island; the first by Prosper, from the year 429 to 435; the other, according to Constantius, who is followed by Bede, from the year 446 to 453. Both are however involved in inextricable difficulties. See Smith's Bede, i. 22. n.

Bede's narrative of the mission and life of Germanus is taken verbally from a life of that saint written by Constantius, a presbyter of Lyons, who flourished about the year 480. See the Acta Sanctorum, and Surius, Act. SS. ad diem Julii 31. Another life of Germanus, written in verse by Venantius Fortunatus, bishop of Poictiers, who flourished about the year 560, has been published, by Mabillon in the Acta SS. Bened. Sæc. i. p. 319, and in the Acta SS. T. vi. Maii 27. p. 778, and in Surius for the same day. It is not a little strange that so judicious a writer as Malmsbury should have omitted all notice whatever of Germanus and Lupus.]

A.D. 449. given over to all manner of sin, inasmuch as Gildas their countryman calls them statis atramentum, "the 'ink of the age'." And though God did daily correct them with inroads of pagans, yet, like restive horses, they went the worse for beating. And now the land being exhausted of the flower of her chivalry, (transported and disposed in Roman garrisons as far as Judea and Egypt itself⁴.) could not make good her ground against the Picts, and was fain to request first Theodosius the younger, then Valentinian, the third Roman emperor, (whose homagers the British kings were until this time,) for their assistance. They dispatch petition after petition, embassy on embassy, representing their woeful estate. Now the barbarians beat them to the sea, the sea repelled them to the barbarians; and thus handied betwixt death and death, they must either be killed or drowned. They enforced their request for aid with much earnestness and importunity; all in vain, seeing whisperings and hollowings are alike to a deaf ear, and no answer was returned. Had they been as careful in bemoaning their sins to God, as clamorous to declare their sufferings to the Roman emperor, their requests in heaven had been as graciously received, as their petitions on earth were carelessly rejected⁵.

⁴ In prologo libri de Excid. Brit. [p. 5. ed. Gale.]

⁵ See Notitia Provinciarum, [fol. Basil. 1552.]

⁶ [Their first embassy to Theodosius was probably in 422, and to Valentinian in 446. See Usher, ib. 313 sq. Flor. Wigorn. an 446. At both applications the Britons received assistance, on the latter occasion, after driving the Picts out of the kingdom, the Romans built for them a turf wall (probably similar to that which the Romans used for fortifying their camps) from Solway Firth to the mouth of the Tyne, in the place where the ancient wall of Severus stood. This proved ineffectual; assistance was again de-

15. What might be the cause of this neglect? A.D. 449.
 Had the imperial crown so many flowers that it might afford to scatter some of them? Was Britain grown inconsiderable, formerly worth the conquering, not now worth the keeping? or was it because they conceived the Britons need not so much as was pretended; and aid is an alms ill-bestowed on those beggars who are lame of laziness, and will not work for their living? Or was the service accounted desperate; and no wise physician will willingly undertake a disease which he conceives incurable. The plain truth is, the Roman empire, now grown ruinous, could not repair its out-rooms, and was fain to let them fall down to maintain the rest; and like fencers, receiving a blow on their leg to save their head, exposed the remote countries of Spain, France, and Britain, to the spoil of pagans, to secure the eastern countries near Constantinople, the seat of the empire.

16. Here Vortigern, forsaken of God and man, and left to himself, (malice could not wish him a worse adviser,) resolves on a desperate project, to call in the pagan Saxons out of Germany for his assistance, under Horsus and Hengistus their captains.⁸ Over they come at first but in three great ships, (a small earnest will serve to bind a great bargain,) first possessing the island of Thanet in Kent; but following manded from the Romans with the same success: in the place of the old one, a new wall was built of solid stone, flanked with fortifications which were continued towards the south, with towers at intervals, for better defence and security.

“ Sicque valedixerunt Britanni Romani tanquam ultra non reversuri.” See Bede, Hist. Ecel. i. 12. Flor. Wigorn. ib.]

⁸ [See Nennius, c. xxxv. sq. Bede, E. H. i. 15. Usher, ib. 206-208, 216-221, 230.]

A.D. 449. afterwards in such swarms, that quickly they grew formidable to him that invited them over, of guests turning sojourners, then inmates, and lastly landlords, till they had dispossessed the Britons of the best of the island: the entertaining of mercenary soldiers being like the administering of quicksilver to one in iliaca passio, a receipt not so properly prescribed by the physician to the patient, as by necessity to the physician. If hired aid do on a sudden the work they are sent for, and so have a present passage to be discharged, sovereign use may be made of them: otherwise, if long tarrying, they will eat the entrails, and corrode the bowels of that state which entertains them, as here it came to pass.

The respective bounds of the Saxon heptarchy.

17. For soon after the Saxons erected seven kingdoms in Britain: and because their several limits conduce much to the clear understanding of the following history, and we for the present are well at leisure, we will present the reader with the description of their several principalities. The partition was made by mutual consent, thus far forth, that every king caught what he could, and kept what he caught; and there being amongst them a parity of high-spirited princes, who more prized an absolute sovereignty over a little than a propriety with subjection in never so much, they erected seven several kingdoms in little more than but the third part of this island; a thing which will seem no wonder to him who hath read how the little land of Canaan¹ found room at the same time for one and thirty kings. But let us reckon them up.

i. The first was the kingdom of Kent, which began anno 457, under king Hengist^u. It contained A. D. 449. the county of Kent, as it is at this day bounded, without any notable difference. And though this kingdom was the least of all, as consisting but of one entire county without any other addition, yet was it much befriended in the situation for traffick with France and Germany. Besides, it being secured on three sides with Thames and the sea, and fenced on the fourth with woods, this made their kings (naturally defended at home) more considerable in their impressions on their neighbours.

¹ Joshua xii. 24

ii. Of the South-Saxons, comprising Sussex and Surrey, both which, till very lately, were under one sheriff. And this kingdom began anno 491^v, under king Ælle, and was the weakest of all the seven, affording few kings, and fewer actions of moment.

iii. Of the East-Saxons, comprehending Essex, Middlesex, and so much of Hertfordshire as is under the bishop of London's jurisdiction, whose diocese is adequate to this kingdom. A small ring, if we survey the little circuit of ground; but it had a fair diamond in it, the city of London, though then but a stripling in growth, well thriving in wealth and greatness. This kingdom began in Erchenwin about the year 527^w.

^u [The Saxon Chronicle, and Florence of Worcester both in the body of his history and in the appendix, (expressly devoted to the rise and limits of these kingdoms), date the commencement of the reign of Hengist in the year 455. From both historians, however, it is evident that the Britons were not entirely expelled from Kent till 457. This kingdom included also the Isle of Wight and the coast opposite.]

^v [In 477. According to the Saxon Chronicle, Florence of Worcester, and Henry of Huntingdon, (f. 179.) the Britons were completely extirpated from this kingdom at the siege of Andredes-cester (Pevensey?) in 491.]

^w [See Mat. of Westm. a. 527. Hen. of Huntingdon, f. 180.]

A.D. 449. iv. Of the East-Angles, containing Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, with the isle of Ely, and (as it seems, saith a reverend writer¹) part of Bedfordshire. It began anno 575², under king Uffa, and lay most exposed to the cruelty of the Danish incursions.

v. Of Mercia, so called because it lay in the middle of the island, being the marches or limits on which all the residue of the kingdoms did bound and border³. It began anno 582⁴, under king Cerdic, and contained the whole counties of Lincoln, Northampton, (with Rutland, then and long since part thereof,) Huntingdon, Buckingham, Oxford, Worcester, Warwick, Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, Stafford, and Chester; besides part of Hereford and

¹ Usher de Brit. Ecc. Prior. p. 394 = 210.

² [This date is far too low. It is evident from Florence of Worcester, (p. 569,) and William of Malmesbury, (f. 14.) that the kingdom of the East-Angles was prior to that of the West-Saxons. Indeed from their language it may fairly be concluded to be next in antiquity to that of Kent. The opinion therefore of Ranulph Hygden (though a writer of no great judgment) is probably correct, that it commenced in 492 under king Uffa. This is more probable from a fact stated by the same writer, and confirmed by Bede, that the East-Angles were originally called Uffingeri. Bede, Eccl. Hist. ii. 15. R. Hygden p. 224. ed. Gale. See also Mat. Westm. p. 196, 197.

(Of the precise date of the kingdom of the East-Saxons, neither Florence of Worcester nor Malmesbury have spoken positively; they state that it was founded at the same time as that of the East-Angles. Perhaps somewhat later. Fuller probably derived this date from Henry of Huntingdon, who seems to place the commencement of the kingdom of the East-Saxons in the ninth year of Cerdic, king of Wessex, which would make the date 527. See Huntingd. f. 190.]

³ Lambarde's Descript. of Kent, [p. 5. ed. 1596. The name was derived, according to Lambard, from the Saxon word meare, signifying a bound or limit.]

⁴ [In 545 according to Mat. of Westminster. None of the earlier writers speak positively as to the date. See Huntingd. f. 181.]

Salop, (the remnant whereof was possessed by the A.D. 449. Welsh,) Gloucester, Bedford, and Lancaster. In view it was the greatest of all the seven: but it abated the puissance thereof, because on the west it affronted the Britons, being deadly enemies; and bordering on so many kingdoms, the Mercians had work enough at home to shut their own doors^b.

vi. Of Northumberland, corrival with Mercia in greatness, though far inferior in populousness, as to which belonged whatsoever lieth betwixt Humber and Edinborough-Firth. It was subdivided sometimes into two kingdoms, of Bernicia and Deira. The latter consisted of the remainder of Lancashire, with the entire counties of York, Durham, Westmoreland, and Cumberland. Bernicia contained Northumberland, with the south of Scotland to Edinborough. But this division lasted not long, before both were united together. It began anno 547, under king Ida^c.

vii. Of the West-Saxons, who possessed Hampshire, Berkshire, Wiltshire, Somerset, Dorset, and Devonshire; part of Cornwall, and Gloucestershire: yea, some assign a moiety of Surrey unto them. This kingdom began anno 519^d, under king Cerdic^{us},

^b [Lambarde, ib. Under Mercia was included the territory or kingdom of the Middle-Anglii, of which frequent mention occurs in Bede and the Saxon Chronicle. It was apparently governed by a viceroy dependant on the kingdom of Mercia.]

^c [Saxon Chron. and Flor. Wigorn. in a. 547. Previous to the time of Ida, Northumberland was governed by dukes, who were subject to the kings of Kent; for when Hengist was confirmed in Kent, he sent Otha and Ebusa to subjugate the northern parts of the island. Malms. De gestis Regum, f. 8.]

^d [In the Saxon Chronicle it is attributed to the year 495, but the complete and undisturbed possession of it to the year 519. See Will. of Malms-

A.D. 449 and excelled for plenty of ports on the south and Severn sea, store of boroughs, stoutness of active men, (some impute this to the natural cause of their being hatched under the warm wings of the south-west wind,) which being excellent wrestlers, gave at last a fall to all the other Saxon kingdoms. So that as the seven streams of Nilus lose themselves in the midland sea, this heptarchy was at last devoured in the West-Saxons' monarchy.

The reason that there is some difference in writers in bounding of these several kingdoms is, because England being then the constant cockpit of war, the limits of these kingdoms were in daily motion, sometimes marching forward, sometimes retreating backward, according to variety of success. We may see what great difference there is betwixt the bounds of the sea at high-water, and at low-water mark: and so the same kingdom was much disproportioned to itself, when extended with the happy chance of war, and when contracted at a low ebb of ill success. And here we must not forget that amongst these seven kings, during the heptarchy, commonly one was most puissant, overruling the rest, who styled himself king of the English nation⁴.

18. But to return to the British church, and the year of our Lord 449, wherein St. Patrick, the apostle of Ireland, is notoriously reported to have come to Glassenbury: where finding twelve old monks, successors to those who were first founded there by

bur. f. 5, 6, and Hen. Hunt-ingd. f. 179. For the division of these kingdoms, and the extent of the different sees, according to the earliest and most trustworthy chroniclers, see Malms. ibid. f. 18.]

⁴ Camden's Brit. p. 97.

Irish St.
Patrick said to live and die at Glassenbury.

Joseph of Arimathea,) he, though unwilling, was A.D. 449. chosen their abbot, and lived with them thirty-nine years, observing the rule of St. Mark and his Egyptian monks; the order of Benedictines being as yet unborn in the world. Give we here a list of these twelve monks, withal forewarning the reader, that for all their harsh sound, they are so many saints; lest otherwise he should suspect them by the ill noise of their names to be worse creatures.

1 Brumbam.	7 Loyor.
2 Hyregaam.	8 Wellias.
3 Brenwal.	9 Breden.
4 Wencreth.	10 Swelwes.
5 Bantcommeweng.	11 Hinloernius.
6 Adelwalred.	12 Hin ^e .

But know that some of these names, as the 3rd, 6th, and 9th, are pure, plain, Saxon words^f, which renders the rest suspected. So that whosoever it was that first gave these British monks such Saxon names, made more haste than good speed, preventing the true language of that age.

19. So great was the credit of St. Patrick at Glas- A.D. 449. senbury, that after his death and burial there, that He is made copartner in the church with the Virgin Mary. church which formerly was dedicated to the Virgin Mary alone, was in after-ages jointly consecrated to her and St. Patrick. A great presumption: for if it be true what is reported, that at the first, by direction of the angel Gabriel^g, that church was solely devoted to the Virgin Mary; surely either the same or some other angel of equal power ought to have

• [See Malmesbury, De Antiquitate Glastoniæ, p. 296, and Usher, ib. p. 56.] Camden, and since by the archbishop of Armagh. [See Usher, ib. p. 56.]

^f First observed by Mr.

^g See 1. Cent. 2. parag. p. 17.

A.D. 449. ordered the admission of St. Patrick to the same, to be matched and impaled with the blessed Virgin in the honour thereof. In reference to St. Patrick's being at Glassenbury, several Saxon kings granted large charters, with great profits and privileges to this place.

Yet the credit of Patrick's being at Glassenbury shrewdly shaken.

20. But now the spite is, that an unparalleled critic in antiquity^b leaves this Patrick at this time sweating in the Irish harvest, having newly converted Leinster to the faith, and now gone into the province of Munster on the same occasion. Yea, he denies (and proveth the same) that this Patrick ever lived, or was buried at Glassenbury. But be it known to whom it may concern, that the British are not so overfond of St. Patrick, as to ravish him into their country against his will, and the consent of time. Yea, St. Patrick missed as much honour in not being at Glassenbury, as Glassenbury hath lost credit if he were never there; seeing the British justly set as high a rate on that place, as the Irish do on his person. See but the glorious titles (which with small alteration might serve for Jerusalem itself) given to Glassenbury: and seeing now the place is for the most part buried in its own dust, let none envy these epithets for the epitaph thereof.

Here lies the City^c which once was the Fountain and Original of all Religion, built by Christ's disciples, consecrated by Christ himself^d; and this place is the MOTHER OF SAINTS^e.

^b James Usher, de Brit. [Malmesb. ib. p. 313 and Eccl. Primord. p. 875, 883, p. 320.]

^c 894, 895 = 519.

^d Or borough.

^e In the charter of king Ina, [ib. p. 328.] and also in king Edgar's

¹ So called in the charter of king Kenwin. Malmesbury.

We are sorry therefore for St. Patrick's sake, if he A.D. 449.
 was never there. To salve all, some have found out another Patrick, called Senior, or Sen Patrick, (a nice difference,) equal with the Irish apostle in time, and not much inferior in holiness, who certainly lived at Glassenburyⁿ. The plain truth is, that as in the Comedian^o, when there were two Amphitruos and two Sosias, they made much fallacious intricacy and pleasant delusion in the eyes of the spectators :
 so there being in this age two Patricks, (others say three^p,) two Merlin^qs, two Gildases^r, and (that the homonymy may be as well in place as in persons) three Bangors^s, three Glassenburies^t, (as haste or ignorance in writers mistake them,) these jumbled together have made a marvellous confusion in writers, to the great prejudice of history, where they are not exactly observed.

21. But leaving St. Patrick, let us try whether we A.D. 450.
 can have better success with St. Ursula, daughter of ^{The fabu-} Dinoth, or Deo-notus duke of Cornwall, who in this ^{lous history} year is said with eleven thousand virgins to have ^{of St. Ur-} sailed over into Little Britain in France, there to be married to the Britons their countrymen, who refused to wed French women for their wives : but by foul weather these virgins were cast on the French shore, amongst pagans, by whom they were cruelly murdered, for refusing to forsake their religion or betray their chastity. Others tell the story quite contrary;
 how the aforesaid Ursula with her virgin army went

ⁿ [See Usher, ib. 458, 464.]

^s In Flintshire, in Carnar-

^o Plautus his Amphitruo.

vonshire, in Down in Ireland.

^p See Usher, ib. p. 895.

^t Glasgow in Scotland, Dun-

^q Ambrosius, Caledonius.

glass in Ireland.

^r Albanius, Badonicus.

A.D. 450. to Rome, where she conversed with pope Cyriacus¹, her countryman, and with him returning back into Britain, was murdered by the command of Attila king of the Huns, at Cologne, with all the rest of the virgins, and the aforesaid pope Cyriacus, whose name is omitted in the papal catalogue, because before his death he surrendered his place to Anterus his successor. In which relation we much commend the even tenor thereof, consisting of so level lies, that no one swelling improbability is above the rest; but for matter of time, place, and persons, all passages unlikely alike. We dare not defame Britain, as to suspect but that eleven thousand Christian virgins, all at once, able to travel, might be found therein: though at this time paganism prospered in this land, and religion was in a low condition. But what made these Christian Amazons with Uraula their Penthesilea to go (not to say to gad) to Rome? Surely they were no daughters of Sarah, *which did abide in her tent*², but rather sisters of Dinah³, which would go abroad to see foreign fashions; and therefore their hard usage is the less to be pitied. Was it modest for so many maids to wander by themselves, without a masculine guard to protect them? Did ever such a wood of weak ivy grow alone, without any other trees to support it? But the city of Cologne will not abate us one of the eleven thousand, where their relies and sepulchral inscriptions are at this day to be seen. And we may as safely believe that these virgin-martyrs lie there entombed, as that the bodies of the three wise men of the east, com-

¹ Visiones Elizabethae iv. 2.
ed. Paris, 1513. et Colon.
1628

² Gen. xxvii. 9.
³ Gen. xxxiv. 1.

monly called the three kings of Cologne, which A. D. 450. came to visit our infant Saviour at Bethlehem, are interred in the same city, which the monks of Cologne brag of, and shew to travellers. Besides all this, there is a town in Berkshire called Maidenhead^y, which (as many other churches in Christendom) was dedicated in memory of their virginity: which, if it be not an argument strong enough to convert the reader to the belief of this story, we must leave him to his infidelity; that as tales of bugbears are made to fright crying children, so this story of Ursula was contrived to befool credulous men.

22. Nor hath the judicious reader cause to wonder A. D. 453. that no better account is given of the British church ^{Why so little church} in this age, considering the general persecution by ^{story in this age.} pagan Saxons. Religion nowadays played least in sight, hiding itself in holes; and the face of the church was so blubbered with tears, that she may seem almost to have wept her eyes out, having lost her seers and principal pastors. Only two prime preachers appear: Vodine, the learned and pious bishop of London, who, taking the confidence to reprove Vortigern the British king, for putting away his lawful wife and wedding Rowen, the heathen daughter of Hengist, was by him most barbarously murdered^z: the second, Gildas Albanius, (much ancienter than his namesake surnamed the wise,) born in Scotland, bred in France; whence returning into the south of Britain, he applied himself to the preaching of divinity, and reading liberal sciences to

^y Camden's Brit. in Berkshire, [p. 207. Of St. Ursula, ^z Hector Boeth. Scot. bist.
see Usher, ib. p. 331.]

A.D. 462. many auditors and scholars at Pepidiae^a, a promu-tory in Pembrokeshire.

Gildas at a strange night suddenly silenced.

23. It happened on a day, as Gildas was in his sermon, (reader, whether smiling or frowning, forgive the digression,) a nun^b big with child came into the congregation, whereat the preacher presently was struck dumb, (would not a maid's child amaze any man?) and could proceed no further. Afterward he gave this reason of his silence, because that virgin bare in her body an infant of such signal sanctity, as far transcended him. Thus as lesser lodestones are reported to lose their virtue in the presence of those that are bigger, so Gildas was silenced at the approach of the Welsh St. David, (being then but Hance en Keldar,) though afterward, like Zachary, he recovered his speech again. Thus fabulous authors^c make this St. David a mock John Baptist, forcing a fond parallel betwixt them; where to make the proportion current, Gildas must be allowed father to St. David. But enough; I like this scent so ill, I will follow it no further.

The par-ticularity of Saxon writers.

24. Meantime fierce and frequent fighting betwixt the British and Saxons about defending and enlarging their dominions. And although Gildas (and out of him Bede) confess often alternation of success, yet other Saxon writers mention not the least overthrow of their own side, but constant conquering; as if

^a Usher de Brit. Eccl. p. 442=237. [In Welsh, Cantred-Dewi, that is, St. David's land.] ^c Girald Cambrensis, as quoted below]

^b Not a nun, though her name was Nonnita. See Girald. ^d Girald Cambrensis in the life of St. David. [Since published by Wharton in the Anglia Sacra, vol. II. p. 63c.]

^c [Usher, ib. p. 443=237.]

their generals had always buckled on victory with A.D. 462. their armour. It is almost incredible that ingenuous men should be so injurious to the truth and their own credits, by partiality, were it not that the factions of modern pens invite us to the belief thereof; not describing battles with a full face, (presenting both sides,) but with a half face, advancing their own, and depressing the achievements of the opposite party. Most true it is the British got many victories, especially under hopeful prince Vortimer^e, whose valour was the best bank against the Saxon deluge; until broken down by untimely death, the pagans generally prevailed, much by their courage, more by their treachery.

25. For they invited the British to a parley and ^{The British} banquet on Salisbury plain; where suddenly drawing ^{treach-} out their seaxes, (concealed under their long coats,) ^{erously} being crooked swords, the emblem of their indirect proceedings, they made their innocent guests with ^{murdered.} their blood pay the shots of their entertainment. Here Aurelius Ambrosius is reported to have erected that monument of Stonehenge to their memory^f.

26. It is contrived in form of a crown, consisting ^{A.D. 463.} of three circles of stones set up gatewise; some ^{The de-} called corsestones, of twelve tons, others called ^{scription of} eronets, of seven tons weight: those haply for ^{Stone-} greater, and these for inferior officers^g: and one ^{henge.}

^e [Son of Vortigern. For an account of his battles with Hengist, and the subsequent treachery of the Saxons, see Nennius, chap. xlv—lii, and the judicious narrative of William of Malmesbury, De Gestis Reg. f. 4. Compare Matth.

Westmon. an. 460 sq., who has incorporated into his chronicle the British accounts.]

^f [See the Life of St. Dubricius, in Wharton's Angl. Sacr. II. 656.]

^g Camden's Britann. in Wiltshire, [p. 183.]

A.D. 463. stone at distance seems to stand sentinel for the rest. It seems equally impossible that they were bred here, or brought hither, seeing (no navigable water near) such voluminous bulks are unmanageable in cart or waggon. As for the tale of Merlin's conjuring them by magic out of Ireland, and bringing them aloft in the skies, (what in Charles' wain!) it is too ridiculous to be confuted. This hath put learned men on necessity to conceive them artificial stones, consolidated of sand. Stand they there in defiance of wind and weather, which hath discomposed the method of them; which, if made of any precious matter, (a bait to tempt avarice,) no doubt long since had been indicted of superstition; whereas now they are protected by their own weight and worthlessness.

A.D. 466.
Vortigern burning in lust, burnt to ashes.

27. Vortigern the British king fled into Wales, to his castle Genereu, impregnable for situation, which he manned and womaned, (conveying a multitude of his whores into it,) and there lived surfeiting in lust, while his land lay sweltering in blood. Here Aurelius Ambrosius, setting fire on his castle, burnt him and his to ashes. This gave occasion to the report so constantly affirmed by many authors, (and men are prone to believe prodigious deaths of such as led licentious lives,) that Vortigern's palace, like another Sodom, was burnt by fire from heaven^b. Indeed in a secondary sense it was true; as all exemplary punishments more visibly proceed from divine vengeance. But otherwise, the first raisers of this fable did apparent wrong to the attribute of God's truth.

^b (As Nennius describes it, parts concerning the death of Hist. Brit. chap. xlv. He Vortigern. See also Usher, ib. also sets down the other re. 206, 242.)

in pretending to do extraordinary right unto his A.D. 466.
justice.

28. This Aurelius Ambrosius is said to be ex-^{Aurelius} tracted of the Roman race, who having done this ^{causelessly} execution on Vortigern the tyrant, was a singular ^{by an} champion of the British against their enemies. One composed of valour and religion¹, wholly employing himself in time of peace to raise new churches, repair old, and endow both: unworthy therefore the libel of an ^k Italian author, who on no other evidence than his own bare assertion, traduceth this Ambrosius to have been a favourer of Judaism, Arianism, Manicheism, and a persecutor of the professors of true religion. Thus the greatest virtue is sanctuary too small to secure any from the pursuit of slanderous pens: and thus some humorous authors, leaving the road of true reports, because common, go a way by themselves of different relation, so to entitle themselves to more immediate and peculiar intelligence; as if others (being only of truth's council) had not received such private instructions as themselves, being cabinet historians.

29. Leave we this Ambrosius bickering with the ^{The academy of learned} Saxons, with interchange of success, much com-^{men under Dubritius.} mended for his constancy in all conditions. For sometimes his valour was the hammer upon, sometimes his patience was the anvil beneath his enemies; but always he bravely bare up his spirits: and as the sun looks biggest on the earth when he is nearest to set, so he carried it out with the boldest appearance in the lowest declination of his fortune. If we be-

¹ [See Bede, E. H. i. 16.]

^k Gotfrid. Viterbiensis Chro. part 18. [Basil. 1559.]

A.D. 466. hold the church in his time, the most visible estate thereof presents itself to us in the academy which Dubritius kept, near the river Wye in Monmouthshire. His father, say some¹, was unknown; others make him to be son to Pepiæ, a petty king in this age²: it being observable, that in this and the next century all men eminent for learning and religion are either made without known fathers, or sons to kings; (no mean betwixt these extremes, as by many instances may appear;) so that such as consider the narrowness of the principality, will admire at the number of British princes. This Dubritius taught many scholars for seven years together, in human and divine learning, (being himself, in his life, a book of piety of the best edition for his pupils to peruse,) amongst whom the chiefeſt, Theliau, Sampson, Ubelin, Merchiguin, Elguored, &c.; for the reader had better believe than read the names of the rest³, remarkable only for length and hardness, without any other information. Afterward Dubritius removed to Warwick, (haply mistaken for Werwick, a village some two miles from Cardigan⁴.) and from thence it seems returned to Moch-Rhoc, that is, "the place of a hog;" because he was admonished, in a vision in his sleep, there to build a chapel or oratory, where

¹ Johan. Timmuthensis in ejus vita, (quoted by Usher, ib. 445 = 23⁴.)

² Chro. colleg. Warwickensis, (quoted by Usher, ib. Capgrave abridged the narratives of John of Timmuth. In an ancient life of St. Dubricius, written in the eleventh or twelfth century by Benedict, a monk of Gloucester, he is stated to be the grandson of Pepiæ, and a very different account is given of his birth. This life has been printed in Wharton's Ang. Sacr. II. 654. Benedict in his introduction states that he compiled this life from authentic materials.]

³ [Usher, ib. p. 445 = 23⁴.]

⁴ Vid. Speed's map of that county.

he should find a white sow lodging with the hogs^p, a A.D. 469. clean conceit, and as full of wit as devotion. It seems the friar, father of this fable, had read as far as the eighth book of Virgil's Aeneids, where the river Tiber, in a dream, advised Aeneas to erect an altar, and sacrifice to Juno in the place where he should find the sow lying with the pigs; and from this pagan hint, was advantaged for a popish legend.

30. Here we cannot but renew our former complaint: and it is some mitigation to our misery, (as perchance some ease to the reader,) if we can but Forged lies obtruded on posterity in lieu of lost truths. prevent our old grievances in new expressions: how instead of true history, devoured by time, prodigious tales of impudent brazenfaced monks are obtruded upon us. Thus when the golden shields of king Solomon were taken away, Rehoboam substituted shields of brass in their room^q; though not so good, perchance more gaudy, especially to ignorant eyes viewing them at distance, and wanting either the skill or opportunity to bring them to the touch. Amongst which the tale of Cungarus the Eremite, otherwise called Doccuin^r, (but first let the one man be allowed before his two names be admitted,) may challenge a principal place; being reported son of a Constantinopolitan emperor, and Lucilia his empress^s. A name unowned by any Grecian historians. The best is, that unconscionable liars, though they most hurt themselves, do the least harm others, whose loud ones are both the poison and the antidote, seeing no wise man will believe them. Small

^p [Scropbam album cum porcis cubantem reperit. Usher, ib.]

^q 1 Kings xiv. 27.

^r [Usher, ib. 252.]
^s Joh. Capgrave in vita S. Cungari, [f. lxxx. ed. 1516.]

A.D. 469. grit and gravel may choke a man, but that stone can never stop his throat which cannot enter into his mouth.

A.D. 495. ^{The mas- sacre of the monks at Winchester.} 31. In very deed, very little at this time was ever reported of church matters¹. For a drought of Christian writers (in the heat of persecution) caused a dearth of all history. Now it was that Cerdic², first king of the West-Saxons, having overcome the Britons at Winchester, killed all the monks belonging to the church of St. Amphibalus, and turned the same into a temple of idolatry³. Also Theon, archbishop of London, seeing the pagan Saxons to prevail, left his see, and about this time may be presumed to have fled into Wales⁴. I say, about this time. For what liberty is allowed to prognosticators of weather, to use all favourable correctives and qualifications, (like to be rain, inclined to rain, somewhat rainy, &c.) the same latitude we must request in relating actions past in point of chronology; his fere temporibus, per haec tempora, circa, circiter, plus minus, &c. And what we take upon trust in this kind, let the reader be pleased to charge, not on the score of our ignorance, but on the uncertainty of that age's computation. As for St. Petrock, son to the king of Cumberland, we remit him to the next age, because though budding in this, full blown in the next century.

^{Merlin left in a twilight; whether that magician was an impostor, or} 32. This age is assigned by authors for that famous Ambrose Merlin, (differing from Sylvester Merlin the Scot,) though it be doubtful whether ever such a man in rerum natura; it being suspicious,

¹ [Usher, ib. 249.]

² Wintoniensis Ecc. Hist. signeth the year 586.
c. ix. [quoted by Usher, ib.]

³ But Matth. Florilegus de.

First, because he is reported born at Carmarthen, A.D. 495. then, and that city so denominated from him. his whole story an imposture put upon credulous posterity. Whereas it is called Maridunum by Ptolemy many years before. Thus it is ominous to begin with a lie.

Secondly, because it was said his mother was a nun, got with child by a devil in the form of an incubus; perchance such a one as Chaucer describes.

It seems, that as vestal virgins, when they had stolen a great belly, used to entitle some deity to the getting of their child, (so did the mother of Romulus and Remus,) whereby they both saved themselves from shame, and gained reputation; so nuns in this age, when with child, unable to persuade people (as the poets feign of the Spanish mares) that they were impregnated by the wind alone, made the world believe that some spirit had consorted with them. This makes the whole story of Merlin very doubtful; and as for all his miracles and prophecies, they sink with the subject. For sure the same hand which made the puppet gave it all its motions, and suited his person with properties accordingly. May the reader be pleased to take notice of three ancient British writers:

1. Aquila Septonius, or the Eagle of Shaftesbury, whether he or she.
2. Perdix Præsagus, or Partridge the prophesier.
3. Merlin Ambrose.

All three birds of a feather, and perchance hatched in the same nest of ignorant credulity: nor can I meet with a fourth to make up the mess, except it be the Arabian Phœnix. But because it is a task too great for a giant, to encounter a received tradition, let Merlin be left in a twilight as we found

A.D. 495. him. And surely no judicious man will censure the mention of Merlin, whose magical pranks and conjurations are so frequent in our stories, to be a deviation from the history of the church, who hath read both of Simon Magus, and Elymas the Sorcerer, in the Acts of the Apostles."

* [For a specimen of Merlin's predictions, see Mat. Westmin. an. 464. Up to this period our British history is involved in darkness and confusion. What should be received, and what rejected, is still doubtful, after all the labour and research of Usher, and the critical sagacity of Stillingfleet. The Welsh, if they ever possessed, have never preserved any authentic materials of their history previous to the time of Geofry of Monmouth, and the legends of Monmouth which have won their way in different shapes and disguises into the pages of various chroniclers, are the only source from which our British history is derived. By themselves indeed they never can deceive a sagacious reader into a belief of their authenticity, but when mixed with truths, or employed to give connection and consistency to a few bare facts, and swell them out into the proportions of a just and real history, they perplex the reader, who is continually harassed with the difficulty of separating truth from falsehood, and is in constant danger of assuming plausible interpretations of historical facts for true and genuine, which are purely legendary. In this, British history is not singular; the same is observable in the early annals of all other nations. A few isolated facts remain through the lapse of years, till the ingenuity of some modern writer weaves them together into a seeming consistency, with such additions as his own ingenuity suggests as likely to give an air of plausibility to the whole. When once such a composition has prevailed to be repeated the true history of any country, the work of separating truth from falsehood becomes extremely difficult. The experiment has been tried in Roman history, and until our own writers have passed through as searching a process, we look in vain for a trustworthy history, not merely of the earlier, but likewise of the later annals of this nation.]

THE SIXTH CENTURY.

TO DOUSE FULLER OF HAMPSHIRE, ESQ.*

I cannot say certainly of you as Naomi did of Boaz, He is near of kin unto us, having no assurance, though great probability, of alliance unto you. However, Sir, if you shall be pleased in courtesy to account me your kinsman, I will endeavour that, as it will be an honour to me, it may be to you no disgrace.*

QUESTIONLESS we shall not be ac- A.D. 501.
counted trespassers, though only eccle- The most miserable estate of the British commonwealth.
siastical business be our right road, to go a little in the by-way of state-matters, because leading the shortest passage for the present to our church story. Most miserable at this time was the British commonwealth, crowded up into barren corners, whilst their enemies, the pagan Saxons, possessed the east and south; if not the greatest, the best part of the island. Much ado had Uter^y Pen-dragon, the British king, with all the sinews of his care and courage, to keep his disjointed kingdom together: whose only desire was to prolong the life, it being above his hopes to procure the health of that languishing state. And though sometimes the Britons got the better, yet one may say, their victories were spent before they were gained; being so far behindhand

* [Arms: Argent, three barrulets and a canton gules. B.]

* 2 Ruth 20.
y [Uthr, that is, fearful or wonderful. Usher, ib. 249.]

A.D. 501. before, that their conquest made no show, swallowed up in the discharging of old arrearages. Needs then must religion now in Britain be in a doleful condition; for he who expects a flourishing church in a fading commonwealth, let him try whether one side of his face can smile when the other is pinched.

A.D. 508. King Arthur's actions much discredited by monkish fictions. 2. Pen-dragon dying, left the British kingdom to Arthur his son, so famous in history, that he is counted one of the nine worthies^y; and it is more than comes to the proportion of Britain, that amongst but nine in the whole world, two should prove natives in this island, Constantine and Arthur. This latter was the British Hector, who could not defend that Troy which was designed to destruction: and it soundeth much to his honour, that perceiving his country condemned by God's justice to ruin, he could procure a reprieve, though not prevail for the pardon thereof. More unhappy was he after his death, hyperbolical monks so advancing his victories, above all reach of belief, that the twelve pitched battles of Arthur, wherein he conquered the pagan Saxons, find no more credit than the twelve labours of Hercules. Belike the monks hoped to pass their lies for current, because countenanced with the mixture of some truth; whereas the contrary came to pass, and the very truths which they have written of him are discredited, because found in company with so many lies. Inasmuch that learned Leland is put to it to make a book for the asserting of Arthur. Many are unsettled about him, because Gildas his countryman (living much about his age) makes no mention of him: though such may be something [See Usher, ib. 249 sq. Arthur Latine translatum non

ursum horribilem, &c. ib.]

satisfied, if considering the principal intent of that A. D. 508. querulous author is not to praise, but to reprove, not greatly to grace, but justly to shame his country; his book being a bare black bill of the sins and sufferings, monsters and tyrants of Britain, keeping no catalogue of the worthies of this island; so that neither Lucius, Constantine, nor Arthur, are once named by him. But the best evidence that once Arthur lived in Britain is, because it is certain he died in Britain, as appeared undeniably by his corpse, coffin, and epitaph, taken up out of his monument in Glassenbury in the reign of king Henry the Second, whereof many persons of quality were eyewitnesses*.

3. The entire body of the British church at this time was in Wales, where Bangor on the north, and Caer-lion (on Usk in Monmouthshire) on the south, were the two eyes thereof for learning and religion. The latter had in it the court of king Arthur, the see of an archbishop, a college of 200 philosophers, who therein studied astronomy, and was a populous place of great extent^a. But cities,

* Giraldus Cambrensis, an eyewitness. Camden's Brit. in Somersetshire, [p. 166. Aurielius Ambrosius, of whom some account is given at p. 105. was assisted in his efforts to repel the Saxons by Arthur. William of Malmesbury, who mentions the fact, observes in reference to the legendary tales circulated by the Britons respecting this prince, and subsequently embodied into a regular narrative by Geoffrey of Monmouth; " Hic est Ar-

" thurus de quo Brittonum
" nugæ hodieque delirant;
" dignus plane quem non fal-
" laces somniarent fabulæ, sed
" veraces prædicarent historiæ,
" quippe qui labantem patriam
" diu sustinuerit, infractasque
" civium mentes ad bellum
" acuerit." De Gestis Reg.
f. 4.]

^a Thomas James out of Alexander Elsebiensis. MS. quoted by Camden in his Brit. in Monmouthshire, [p. 492.]

A. D. 508. as well as their builders, are mortal: it is reduced at this day to a small village. But as aged parents content and comfort themselves in beholding their children, wherein their memories will be continued after their death, so Caer-lion is not a little delighted to see herself still survive in her daughter Newport, a neighbouring town raised out of the ruins of her mother^b. Whilst the other stood in prime, there was scarce an eminent man who did not touch here for his education; whom we will reckon in order, the rather because all the church history of this age seems confined to some principal persons. Dubritius aforementioned was the father and founder of them all, late bishop of Llandaff, now archbishop of Cærlion, a great champion of the truth against Pelagius^c; and he had the honour here to crown two kings, Uter and Arthur. Being very old, he re-

A. D. 516. signed his archbishopric to David, his scholar; and that he might be more able and active to wrestle with death, he stripped himself out of all worldly employment, and became an anchorite in the island of Bardsey^d. Six hundred years after, (namely, May the 20th, 1120,) his bones were translated to Llandaff, and by Urban, bishop thereof, buried in the church, towards the north side thereof.

4. David, the next archbishop, of royal extraction, was uncle to king Arthur^e. He privately studied

St. David an advocate of monastic life.

^b (Camden, ib.)

^c (For which purpose he was consecrated by Germanus and Lupus, according to the writer of his life, in Wharton's Angl. Sacr. II. 636)

^d (Godwin, De præs. p. 57. Godwin's book is particularly valuable, for the history of the early Welsh bishops, having been principally compiled from the celebrated "Liber Llandaffensis". He was himself bishop of Llandaff.)

^e (See his life by Geraldus Cambrensis in Wharton's Angl. Sacr. II. p. 628.)

the scriptures ten years before he would presume to A. D. 519.
 preach, and always carried the Gospels about him. He kept a synod against the Pelagian error, a second edition whereof was set forth in his time, and confirmed many wavering souls in the faith. By leave obtained from king Arthur, he removed the archiepiscopal seat from Caer-lion to Menevea, now called St. David's, in Pembrokeshire. In which exchange his devotion is rather to be admired, than his discretion to be commended; leaving a fruitful soil for a bleach barren place^f; though the worse it was, the better for his purpose, being a great promoter of a monastical life. And though the place was much exposed to the rapine of pirates^g, yet this holy man laid up his heavenly treasure where thieres do not break through nor steal.

5. Yet I am sensible that I have spent, to my shame, so much precious time in reading the legend of his life, that I will not wilfully double my guiltiness in writing the same, and tempt the reader to offend in like nature. This miracle I cannot omit^h. David one day was preaching in an open field to the multitude, and could not be well seen because of the concourse, (though they make him four cubits high,

^f Giraldus Cambrensis. [De Statu Menevensis Eccl. in Wharton's A. S. II. p. 542.]

^g Camden's Brit. in Pembrokeshire, [p. 510.]

^h H. Porter's Flowers of the English Saints, p. 222. [“The Flowers of the lives of the most renowned Saints of the three kingdoms, England, Scotland, and Ireland. By the R. Father Hierome Porter, Priest and Monke of the “ holy order of Sainct Benedict, of the Congregation of England. The first tome. Printed at Doway, with licence and approbation of the ordinary, 1632.” 4^o. Formed on the plan of the Roman and other martyrologies. The first volume reaches to the end of June. I have not been able to discover whether the second volume was ever published.]

A.D. 519. a man and half in stature¹⁾) when, behold, the earth whereon he stood, officiously heaving itself up, mounted him to a competent visibility above all his audience²⁾. Whereas our Saviour himself, when he taught the people, was pleased to choose a mountain³⁾, making use of the advantage of nature, without improving his miraculous power. He died aged 146 years, on the first of March⁴⁾, still celebrated by the Welsh with wearing of a leek⁵⁾; perchance to perpetuate the memory of his abstinence, whose contented mind made many a savoury meal on such roots of the earth.

Reasons
why men in this age lived so long.

6. A wonder it is to see how many Methuselahs (extreme aged men) these times did produce. St. Patrick died aged 122; Samson, aged 120; David, 146; Gildas Badonius, 90, &c.⁶⁾ Some reasons whereof may be alleged, because living retired in a contemplative way, they did not bruise their bodies with embroiling them in worldly affairs: or it may be ascribed to their temperate diet, whilst many of our age spill their radical moisture through the leaks of their own luxury. Nor is it absurd to say, that God made these great tapers of a more firm and compacted wax than ordinary, that so they might last the longer in burning to give light to his church, and bestowed on them an especial strong natural constitution.

7. About the same time (accuracy in com-

The discreet devo-

¹⁾ Bale, Cent. I. § 55. eleventh century.]

²⁾ Taken from among many other miracles related of him by Geraldus, ib. 638. The life by Geraldus is chiefly a compilation from a life of St. David, written by Ruennarch, vid. signed by authors. See Bale in their general lives, I. § 46, 55, 62, 66.)

³⁾ Matt. v. 1.

⁴⁾ In the year 544. See Usher, ib. 274.]

⁵⁾ Several reasons hereof assigned by authors.

⁶⁾ See Bale in their general

puting years is not to be expected, for never were A. D. 519. more doublings and redoublings made by a hunted ^{tion of Ca-} hare, than there are intricacies in the chronology of ^{odus.} this age, going backward and forward) flourished Cadocus, abbot of Llancarvan in Glamorganshire, son of the prince and toparch of that country. This godly and learned man so renounced the world, that he retained part of his paternal principality in his possession, whereby he daily fed three hundred of clergymen, widows, and poor people, besides guests and visitants daily resorting to him^o. He is equally commended for his policy, in keeping the root, the right of his estate, in his own hands; and for his piety, in bestowing the fruit, the profits thereof, in the relieving of others. It seems in that age wilful poverty was not by vow entailed on monastical life. Nor did this Cadocus, as regulars in aftertimes, with open hands scatter away his whole means, so foolishly to grasp his fist full of popular applause. He is said afterwards to have died at Beneventum in Italy.

8. Iltutus comes next into play, a zealous man, ^{Iltutus} and deep scholar; who not far from Cadocus, ^{abused with} at ^{monkish} ^{forges.} Llan-lwit in Glamorganshire, (contractedly for Llan-iltut,) preached God's word, and set up a college of scholars, being himself a great observer of a single life. It is reported of him, that when his wife repaired to him for due benevolence, or some ghostly counsel, he put out her eyes, out of anger, for interrupting him in his constant course of chastity^o. But surely some blind monk, having one of his eyes put

^o Joan. Timmuthensis in ejus about three miles from Cow-vita, [quoted by Usher, ib. bridge.]
1124=248. Llancarvan is p Bale, Cent. i. §. 52.

A.D. 519. out with ignorance, and the other with superstition, was the first founder of this fable. Thus giddy saints in that age were made martyrs after their death; persecuted (though in their commendation) with impudent and improbable lies. It is reported also of the same Iltutus, that he turned men into stones⁸. Had it been stones into men, converting stupid souls into Christians by his preaching, it had been capable of an allegorical construction; whereas, as now told, it is a lie in the literal, and nonsense in the mystical meaning thereof.

A.D. 521. Samson succeeds, scholar to Iltutus, made by Dubritius bishop at large, *sine titulo*⁹. It seems in that age all bishops were not fixed to the chair of a peculiar church, but some might sit down in any vacant place for their cathedral, and there exercise their episcopal authority, provided it were without prejudice to other bishops. Afterwards this Samson was made archbishop of Dole in French Britain; and in those days, such was the correspondence betwixt this Greater and that Lesser Britain, that they seemed to possess learned men in common betwixt them. Scarce am I reconciled to this Samson for carrying away with him the monuments of British antiquity. Had he put them out to the bank, by procuring several copies to be transcribed, learning thereby had been a gainer; and a saver, had he only secured the originals; whereas now her loss is irrecoverable: principal and interest, authenticies and transcripts, are all embezzled. Nor is the matter much, whether they had miscarried at home, by

⁸ Bale, lib.

p. 1135 = 277

⁹ Usher, de Brit. Ecccl. prim.

⁹ Bale, Cent. 1, § 62.

foes' violence, or abroad, by such friends' negligence. A. D. 540.

10. It were a sin to omit St. Patern, for three and twenty years a constant preacher at Llan-Patern in Cardiganshire^t. His fatherlike care over his flock passeth with peculiar commendation ; “ that he governed his people by feeding them, and fed his people by governing them^u. ” Some years after the place continued an episcopal see, and was extinguished upon occasion of the people’s barbarously murdering of their bishop.

11. St. Petrock comes in for his share, from whom Petrock-stow, contracted Padstow, in Cornwall, is denominated^w. One of great piety and painfulness in that age. Afterward he is said to have gone to the East Indies, (all far countries are East Indies to ignorant people,) and at his return to be buried at Bodman in Cornwall. That county is the Cornucopia of saints, (most of Irish extraction,) and the names of their towns and villages the best nomenclature of the devout men of this age. If the people of that province have as much holiness in their hearts, as the parishes therein carry sanctity in their names, Cornwall may pass for another Holy Land in public reputation.

12. Next St. Petrock comes St. Teliau; for it is pity to part two such intimate friends. He was called, by allusion to his name, Helios^x, which in Greek signifieth the sun, because of the lustre of his life and learning. But the vulgar sort, who count it no fault to miscall their betters, if they have hard Paternus a pattern for all bishops.

A. D. 548.
Petrock the captain of Cornish saints.

A. D. 550.
The piety of St. Teliau.

^t [Usher, ib. 275.]

^u Camden's Brit. in Cardiganshire, [p. 518.]

^w [Usher, ib. 292.]

^x Harpsfield Hist. Eccl. Ang. p. 41. [ed. 1622.]

A. D. 550. names, called him Eliud, (one of that name was one of our Saviour's ancestors^a.) turning the Greek into an Hebrew word, and understanding both alike. He was scholar to Dubritius, and succeeded him in the bishopric of Landaff. A pious man, constant preacher, and zealous repressor of the reigning sins of that time^b. This is all the certain truth extant of him; which some monks counting too little, have with their fabulous breath blown up the story of his life to such a bigness, that the credit thereof breaks with its own improbability^c. Witness his journey to Jerusalem, full of strange miracles, where he had a cymbal given him, exceeding the sound of an organ, and ringing every hour of its own accord. No doubt a loud one. "Loaden with merits," saith the author^d, (I had thought nothing but sin could burden a saint,) he departed this life, having his memory continued in many churches of South-Wales, dedicated to him, and is remembered in the Roman Calendar on the ninth of February.

A. D. 580.
Several other worthies of the same age.

18. I had almost forgotten Congel, abbot of Bangor, who much altered the discipline of that monastery; Kentigern, the famous bishop of Elwy in North-Wales; St. Asaph, his successor in the same place. In whose mouth this sentence was frequent, "Such who are against the preaching of "God's word, envy the salvation of mankind"^e. As

^a Matt. i. 14

^b Bale, Cent. i. §. 58.

^c In the book of his life extant in the church of Landaff, [See the life of St. Telian in Wharton's Ang. Sacr. II. 662.]

^d H. Porte's Flowers of the Saints, p. 150.

^e Fuller has fallen into the same error as Bale, Cent. i. §. 53.

This Congellus or Congallus was an Irishman, not a Briton, the monastery founded by him was in Ulster, not the celebrated Bangor in Wales. See Ulster, ib. 62, 494.

^f Godwin, de Presul. 633. See also the life of Kentigern, ib. 631.]

for Gildas, surnamed the Wise, their contemporary, A. D. 580. we reserve his character for our library of British historians^c. Many other worthy men flourished at the same time; and a national church being a large room, it is hard to count all the candles God lighted therein.

14. Most of these men seem born under a travelling planet; seldom having their education in the place of their nativity: oftentimes composed of Irish infancy, British breeding, and French preferment; taking a cowl in one country, a crozier in another, and a grave in a third; neither bred where born, nor beneficed where bred, nor buried where beneficed; but wandering in several kingdoms. Nor is this to be imputed to any humour of inconstancy, (the running gout of the soul,) or any affected unsettledness in them; but proceeding from other weighty considerations. First, to procure their safety. For in time of persecution, the surest place to shift in, is constant shifting of places: not staying any where so long as to give men's malice a steady aim to level at them. Secondly, to gain experience in those things which grew not all in the same soil. Lastly, that the gospel thereby might be further and faster propagated. When there be many guests and little meat, the same dish must go clean through the board; and Divine providence ordered it, that in the scarcity of preachers, one eminent man, travelling far, should successively feed many countries.

15. To most of these authors many written volumes are assigned, the titles and beginnings whereof you

^c Vide our Library of British Histor. N^o. i. [This work was never accomplished; perhaps being merged in "The Worthies," where some account of Gildas will be found.]

A. D. 150. may find in our countrymen Bale and Pits, who will persuade you that they have seen and perused some of them. This they do partly to enhance the merit of their industry in finding out so many rarities, and partly to commend to the world the latitude of their own reading. I shall as soon believe that they have seen all Solomon's volumes, which he wrote from the Cedar of Libanus, to the hyssop that groweth on the wall. But this humour possesseth many men that brag of many books coming under their discovery: as if not only with the mice, they had crept through the crannies of all libraries, but also with the moths, had got betwixt the leaves of all treatises therein. In plain truth, as it is probable that these British prelates wrote many books of consequence, so it is certain that long since by time they have been abolished. As for those spurious tracts which monks in after-ages set out under these worthy men's names, they are no more to be accounted the true offspring of these learned saints, than that common manna, ordinarily sold in apothecaries' shops, is the selfsame with that angel's food which fell down from heaven and feasted the Israelites.

British
writers.

THE CHURCH HISTORY OF BRITAIN.

THE SECOND BOOK,
FROM THE CONVERSION OF THE SAXONS TO CHRISTIANITY, UNTIL THE (COMMONLY CALLED) CONQUEST OF THE NORMANS.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY,
LORD MARQUIS OF DORCHESTER,
EARL OF KINGSTON, VISCOUNT NEWARK, LORD PIERRE-PONT, &c.^a

HOW low learning ran in our land amongst the native nobility some two hundred years since, in the reign of king Henry the Sixth, too plainly appeareth by the motto in the sword of the martial earl of Shrewsbury, where at the same time one may smile at the simplicity and sigh at the barbarism thereof, SUM TALBOTI, PRO OCCIDERE INIMICOS MEOS. The best Latin that lord, and perchance his chaplains too in that age, could afford.

But in the next generation we may observe the rise of learning in noble families. I behold John Tiptoft, earl of Worcester, bred in Balliol college, as the first English person of honour that graced learning with the study thereof in the days of king

^a [This was the celebrated Henry Pierrepont, who was appointed one of king Charles' commissioners at the treaty of Uxbridge. See some account of him in Wood's Fasti, ii. 22. He was highly esteemed for his abilities both as a scholar and an author.]

Edward the Fourth, both at home and in foreign universities. He made so eloquent an oration in the Vatican in the presence of pope Pius the Second, one of the least bad, and most learned of any of his order, that his holiness was divided betwixt weeping and wondering thereat^b.

This earl may be said to have left John Bourchier, baron of Berners^c, and governor of Calais, the heir to his learning; as who wrote many treatises and made excursions into variety of studies in the days of king Henry the Seventh^d.

This learned baron had several successors under king Henry the Eighth at the same time to his parts and liberal studies.

1. Henry lord Stafford, son to the last duke of Buckingham of that name^e.

2. William lord Montjoy, a great patron to Erasmus, and well skilled in chymistry and mathematics^f.

3. Henry Howard, earl of Surrey, though last in

^b Bale, [Cent. viii. §. 46.]

^c The celebrated translator of Froissart. He died in 1533. For a further account of him and his writings, see Woods Ath. i. 33.

^d Bale, Cent. ix. §. 1, et Pits de Scip. Anglic. [p. 713.]

^e A nobleman of considerable parts. Among other things, he translated the treatise "De vera differentia inter regiam potestatem et ecclesiasticam" generally known by the name of the king's book, but attributed by Bale to Fox, bishop of Hereford, the king's almoner. This nobleman died in 1558. See his life in Woods Ath. i. 19. Bale, App. p. 112; Strype's Cran. 75. Mem. II. 2. 41.

^f William Blount, fourth baron Mountjoy. Erasmus dedicated to him his Adages. His correspondence with Erasmus is published in Epist. Erasmi, 1642.

time, not least in merit, the first reviver of English poetry: so that he may seem in some sort to wave his coronet to wear the laurels.

Since whose time to our days learning hath ever had a visible succession in our nobility. Amongst whom your honour, as captain of the highest form, is most illustrious.

Indeed your lordship is a real refutation of that scandalous position which some maintain, that such who are generally seen in all arts, cannot be eminently skilful in any one. A position no better than a libel on learning, invented and vented either by the idle, who would not themselves study, or by the envious, who desire to discourage the endeavours of others.

Whereas there is such a sympathy betwixt several sciences, as also betwixt the learned languages, that as in a regular fortification one piece strengtheneth another, a resultive firmness ariseth from their complication, reflecting life and lustre one on another. Arts may be said to be arched together: and all learned faculties have such a mutual reciprocation. Thus one is the better canonist for being a good civilian, and a better common lawyer, for being both of them. And hereof your honour is an experimental proof, whose knowledge is spread so broad, yet lieth so thick in all liberal sciences.

^g [He was beheaded in 1547. too well known to require a His excellencies as a poet are more detailed account.]

What remaineth, but that I crave leave humbly to mind your lordship of that allusive motto to your name, PIE REPONE TE; that your honour reposing yourself piously in this life, may in a good old age be gloriously translated into another. The desire of,

Your Lordship's

Most bounden orator,

THOMAS FULLER.

THE CHURCH HISTORY OF BRITAIN.

CENTURY VI.

T is wonderful to see how the fruits of A.D. 585. great events are virtually comprised in ^{The first occasion of} the small seed of their causes, and how ^{the Saxons' conversion to Christianity.} a contemptible accident may give the occasion of most considerable effects;

as may appear by the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity^a. For it happened that certain Saxon children were to be sold for slaves at the market-place at Rome, when Divine providence, the great clock-keeper of time, ordering not only hours, but even instants^b, to his own honour so disposed it, that Gregory, afterwards first bishop of Rome of that name, was present to behold them. It grieved the good man to see the disproportion betwixt the faces and fortunes, the complexions and conditions of those children, condemned to a servile estate, though carrying liberal looks, so legible was ingenuity in their faces. It added more to his sorrow, when he conceived that those youths were twice vassals,

^a Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 1.

^b Luke ii. 38.

A.D. 584. bought by their masters, and sold *under sun*¹; servants in their bodies, and slaves in their souls to Satan which occasioned the good man to enter into further inquiry with the merchants which set them to sale what they were, and whence they came, according to this ensuing dialogue.

Greg. Whence come these captives?

Mer. From the isle of Britain.

Greg. Are those islanders Christians?

Mer. O no: they are pagans.

Greg. It is sad that the author of darkness should possess men with so bright faces. But what is the name of their particular nation?

Mer. They are called Angli.

Greg. And well may, for their angel-like faces: it becometh such to be coheirs with the angels in heaven. In what province of England did they live?

Mer. In Deira².

Greg. They are to be freed de Ixi ira, from the anger of God. How call ye the king of that country?

Mer. ELLA.

Greg. Surely Hallelujah ought to be sung in his kingdom to the praise of that God who created all things.

¹ Rom. vii. 14.

² Which at this day is the bishopric of Durham, or Durham.

Bede narrates this dialogue as merely traditional, prefixing to it the following observation: "Nec silentio præterea opino que de beato Gregorio traditione

" majorum ad nos usque per-
" lata est." This tradition however has been inserted, nearly in the same words, in the life of Gregory attributed to Joannes Diaconus, &c. &c.
who also mentions the name of the pope to whom Gregory imparted his design of converting Britain, but which is

Thus Gregory's gracious heart set the sound of A. D. 585. every word to the tune of spiritual goodness. Nor can his words be justly censured for levity, if we consider how in that age the elegancy of poetry consisted in rhythm, and the eloquence of prose in allusions. And, which was the main, where his pleasant conceits did end, there his pious endeavours began; which did not terminate in a verbal jest, but produce real effects, which ensued hereupon.

2. For repairing to Pelagius, bishop of Rome, he Gregory would convert England in his person, but doth it by his proxy. imparted his discoveries unto him, desiring that some might be sent to endeavour the conversion of the English nation, tendering his personal service thereunto. But Pelagius was unwilling to expose Gregory to so dangerous a design, and the people of Rome accounting him a precious jewel, to be choicely kept for his own wearing, would not cast this pearl before swine, by hazarding him to the insolency of the pagans. Now Pelagius not long after being called into another world, Gregory succeeded in his omitted in Bede. This was Benedict I., who died in 582, and not Pelagius II., his successor, as Fuller states (see also Malmsb. De Gestis, f. 8.). If therefore any credit be due to this life of Gregory, this dialogue must have taken place before 585. But this error of our author should rather be attributed to Godwin, who quoting the passage of Paulus Diaconus, states that about seven years (he should rather have said eleven, for Gregory was raised to the popedom in 592) had elapsed since this conversation, when Gregory, now pope, attempted that by his own authority which he was not permitted to do whilst in an inferior station. (De Præsul. p. 28.)

Archbishop Parker however, and I think justly, throws discredit upon this whole narrative. Observing upon the authority of Gregory's own letters, that his first motive to the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons, was an application made to him from them for that purpose. See the letters quoted by him in his Antiq. Brit. Eccl. p. 52. They are printed at full length in Wilkins' Conc. I. 10 sq. IV. 714.]

A.D. 595. place; who rising to new greatness, did not fall from his old goodness, but prosecuting his project with more earnestness, sent Augustine the monk, with Mellitus, and forty more, to preach the gospel in Britain. He himself tarrying behind in body, went with them in his spirit¹, accompanying them with his effectual prayers: and none will deny but that Moses in the mount contributed as much to the conquering of Amalek², as Joshua in the valley.

A.D. 596. 3. These men had not gone far, when they were ^{Augustine and his fel.} surprised with a qualm of fear, and sending ^{Augustine shrink for fear.} Augustine back again to Gregory, requested to be excused from going to so barbarous a nation, not as yet converted to civility, whose language they did not understand. Here some will be ready to deride them for cowards; who more seriously considering with how many excuses Moses, being sent by God himself, declined the going to Pharaoh³, and how loath Jeremy was to preach to his countrymen, the stiff-necked Jews⁴, will presently change their censoring into commiserating the frailty of flesh, and common condition of mankind. But those make short miles, who looking through a window, travel a day's journey in an instant, whilst wayfaring men must honestly pay for every step, and dearly earn it with their industry. It is facile for men in their pleasing speculations to project the conversion of a kingdom, and with themselves to discourse a heathen nation into Christianity; whilst those must encounter many difficulties who really go about to perform it. Gregory perceiving them to tire in their under-

¹ 1 Cor. viii. 3
² Exod. xvi. 10

³ Exod. iii. and iv
⁴ Jer. i. 6

takings, spurred them on with his exhortatory letter ; A.D. 596. the copy whereof is here inserted^k, to acquaint us with the style of the bishops of Rome in that age.

“ Gregorius, the servant of the servants of God,
 “ &c. For so much as better it were never to begin “ a good work, then after it is once begun to go “ from it again, you must needs, my dear sons, now “ fulfill the good work, which by the help of God
 “ you have taken in hand. Let therefore neither the “ travail of the journey, neither the talk of evill-“ tongued men dismay you. But with all force and “ fervour make up that you have by the motion of “ God begun, assuring yourselves, that after your “ great labour eternall reward shall follow. Be you
 “ in all points obedient unto Augustine, whom I “ have sent back unto you, and appointed him to be “ your abbot, knowing that shall much profit your “ souls, which you shall do upon obedience of his “ commandment. Our Almighty Lord defend you “ with his grace, and grant me to see the fruit of “ your labours in his kingdome of heaven: and though “ I cannot labour myself with you, yet I may enjoy “ part of your reward, for that I have a will to “ labour. God keep you healthy, my dearly beloved “ children.

“ Dated the 23rd of July, our Lord Mauricius “ Tiberius reigning, our most vertuous emperour, in “ the fourteenth year of his empire, the thirteenth
 “ year after his consulship, indictione 14 ! ”

As yet we see the chaplain had not lorded it over his patron ; as yet the pope's crown was not built

^k Bede's Hist. Eccl. i. 23, translated by Stapleton.

^l [That is in the year 596.]

A.D. 596. three stories high, but observed a distance of submission towards the emperor, as appears by his respectful expressions. Yea, this bishop measured the time by the years of the emperor's reign, whose successors have learned a new arithmetic in their modern dates of charters, only reckoning by the years of their own consecration, without relating to any imperial account. Gregory (by the way) was the first which in humility used the style of seruus servorum Dei. But as in the method of nature, a low valley is immediately seconded with an ambitious hill, so after this humble Gregory, (a submissive soul,) within two years followed Boniface the Third, in whom was the pitch of pride, and height of aspiring haughtiness, to be termed the universal bishop of the world¹⁰.

Augustine
traveled with monk-ing Michaels in his passage through France.

4. Besides the aforesaid letter, Gregory wrote many others, one to Theodoric and Theodebert, kings of France¹¹, and several epistles to sundry French bishops, to accommodate and assist Augustine and his companions in so pious a design. And, which must not be forgotten, with them he sent over Candidus, a priest, into France, to receive the profits and long-detained arrears of the pope's *patrimonium*¹², as he terms it, (the diminutive is well increased at this time,) and with the money to buy clothes for the poor, and also to buy English pagan-captive youths in France of seventeen or eighteen year old, that they might be brought up in Christ.

¹⁰ He was raised to the papacy in 604. "He impetravit ut a Priorum sedes apud Iusticiam caput esset Ecclesie, cum ante I. Constantiopolis primus esse omnium scriberet."

Flor. Wigorn. in C. 8.]

¹¹ Gregor. Ep. 3. 38.

¹² Ibid. v. 1.

¹³ Ibid. v. 1. [All these letters are printed in Wilkins' Conc. Lat. sq. IV. 716.]

tianity in monasteries; so at once bestowing both A.D. 596. liberty, religion, and learning upon them. A transcendent degree of charity; an alms worthy Gregory's hands to give it. And now Augustine with his partners well encouraged, effectually prosecute their project, passing quietly through France, save only at the village of Saye in Anjou, where some giggling huswives (light leaves will be wagged with little wind) causelessly fell a flouting at them. But in after-ages, the people of the same place, to repair this wrong, erected a masculine church (women being interdicted the entrance thereof) to the memory of St. Augustine; and how soundly one woman smarted for her presumption herein, take it on the trust of my author^q

Plebs parat ecclesiam mulieribus haud reserandam :
Introitum tentat una, sed illa perit.

They build a church where women may not enter :
One tried, but lost her life for her adventure.

Yet Augustine himself found courteous usage from the weaker sex: witness the kind carriage of Brunichilda the queen of France unto him, for which Gregory in an epistle^r returned her solemn thanks, and Bertha, the king of France his daughter, wife to Ethelbert king of Kent.

5. Augustine safely wafted over the sea, lands ^{for all his} Augustine with the rest at Thanet in Kent, taking, as it seems, power of working deep footing, if it be true what one writes^s, that the miracles, ^{needs inter-} print of his steps where he first landed left as perfect ^{preters}.

^q Alexander Essebiensis, in his Annal of Saints, and John Capgrave, [in Vita, fol. 31. b.]

^r Lib. v. 59, [and ix. 56.

Printed in Wilkins' Conc. I.
10.]

^s Porter's Flowers of the Saints, in the life of St. Augustine, p. 499.

A.D. 596. a mark in a main rock as if it had been in wax : and the Romanists will cry shame on our hard hearts, if our obdurate belief, more stubborn than the stone, will not as pliably receive the impression of this miracle. But it is worthy our consideration, that though Augustine all his way might be tracked by the wonders he left behind him, (when thirsty, miraculously fetching a fountain¹, when cold, a fire, restoring the blind and lame to their eyes and limbs,) yet for all this he was fain to bring interpreters out of France with him, by whose help he might understand the English, and be understood by them. Whereas in Holy Writ, when the apostles (and papists commonly call Augustine the English apostle, how properly we shall see hereafter) went to a foreign nation, God gave them the language thereof, lest otherwise their preaching should have the vigour thereof abated, taken at the second hand, or rather at the second mouth, as Augustine's was ; who used an interpreter, not as Joseph² to his brethren, out of state and policy, but out of mere necessity. This, I say, well thought on, will make our belief to demur to the truth of his so frequent miracles, being so redundant in working them on trivial occasions, and so defective in a matter of most moment. But leaving him and his for a time safely landed and lodged, that our gratitude to God may be the greater for freeing the Saxons our ancestors from the bondage of idolatry, let us behold with horror the huge fetters of error and ignorance wherewith the Devil kept them in durance before the gospel was preached unto them.

¹ Idem. p. 478

² Gen. xlii. 23

6. The Saxons, like the rest of the Germans, A.D. 596. whilst pure impure pagans, worshipped many idols, ^{The rabble of Saxon} barbarous in name, some monstrous, all antic for ^{of Saxon} idols. shape, and abominable in the rites and ceremonies of their adoration. Some aver that as the Germans, affecting an autarchy, or sole-sufficiency amongst themselves, disdained commerce in customs or civil government with the Romans, so they communicated not with them in their religion. Yet others affirm that in after-ages the Dutch did enter common with the Romish superstition; at least-wise some modern authors have reduced the Saxon idols (symbolizing with the Romans in power and properties) to some conformity with the Roman deities. Now although, according to God's command to the Jews, their names shall not be heard out of our mouth^w, by way of praising them, praying to them, or swearing by them, yet an historical mention of them here ensuing, is as free from offence, as useful for information.

Besides the sun and moon, the Saxons sacrificed to

Name.	Shape.	Office.	Correspondent with
Thor or Thur , abbreviated of Thunre , which we now write Thunder . Thursday named from him ^x .	A corpulent statue reposed on a covered bed, wearing a crown of gold, about which twelve stars; a kingly sceptre in his right hand.	He governed the wind and clouds, causing lightning, thunder, tempest, fair or foul weather.	The Roman JUPITER.
Woden , that is wood, fierce, or furious, giving the denomination to Wednesday , or Wodnesday .	Armed cap a pie , with a military coronet on his head.	He was the god of battle, by whose aid and furtherance they hoped to obtain victory.	MARS ^y .

^w Exod. xxviii. 13.

^x Verstegan's Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, p. 74. [ed. 1634.]

^y So Verstegan, p. 72, but

Camden, Brit. p. 135, makes him to be Mercury. [Perhaps on the authority of Mat. Westm. p. 155.]

A.D. 596. confidence in them. And as the true and real serpent of Aaron¹ did swallow up and devour the seeming serpents which Jannes and Jambres, the Egyptian enchanters did make, so, long since in England, the religion of the true God hath outlived and outlasted, confuted and confounded all false and feigned deities. To conclude this discourse. I have heard of a man, who being drunk, rode over a narrow bridge, (the first and last that ever passed that way, as which in likelihood led him to imminent death,) and next morning viewing how he had escaped, he fell into a swoon with acting over again the danger of his adventure in his bare apprehension. So should England (now, thanks be to God, grown sober and restored to herself) seriously recollect her sad condition, when posting in the paths of perdition, being intoxicated with the cup of idolatry, she would fall into a trance of amazement at the consideration of her desperate state, before Christianity recovered her to her right senses: the manner whereof we now come to relate.

A.D. 597.
The character of king
Ethelbert

9. When Augustine the monk, as is aforesaid, landed in Thanet, Ethelbert was then king of Kent. One who had very much of good nature in him; of a wild olive well civilized, and a stock fit to be grafted upon. Yea, he was already, with king Agrippa, (though not in the same sense,) *almost a Christian*²; because his other half, queen Bertha, daughter to the king of France, was a Christian³: to whom he permitted the free use of her religion, allowing her both Liudhard a bishop, for her chaplain, and an old church in Canterbury, formerly dedicated by the Romans to St. Martin, to exercise A. D. 597. her devotion therein. Besides, at this time, this Ethelbert was in effect monarch of England, whilst his person had residence chiefly in Kent, his power had influence even to Humber, all the rest of the Saxon kings being homagers unto him ; which afterward much expedited the passage of the gospel in England. Thus each officious accident shall dutifully tender his service to the advance of that design which God will have effected.

¹ Exod. vii. 12. ² Acts xxvi. 28. ³ Bede, Hist. Eccl. i. 25.

10. Then Augustine acquainted this Ethelbert Augustine's addresses, and Ethelbert's answer. with his arrival, informing him by his messengers, that he brought the best tidings unto him, which would certainly procure eternal happiness in heaven, and endless reigning in bliss with the true God, to such as should entertain them. Soon after Ethelbert repaired into Thanet ; to whom Augustine made his address, μετὰ πολλῆς φαντασίας, with a deal of (spiritual, carnal) pomp ; having a silver cross carried before him for a banner, the image of our Saviour painted in a tableⁱ, and singing the Litany in the way as they went^j. King Ethelbert desired all things betwixt them might be transacted in the open air, refusing to come under a roof for fear of fascination. And indeed a stranger, who had never seen the like before, beholding Augustine with such abundance of trinkets about him, being formerly jealous, might hereby have his suspicion increased, that he went about some strange machination. However, Ethelbert returned him a civil answer ; “ That their promises were fair and good ; but beⁱ [Merely a painting of our Saviour. “ Imago Domini Salvatoris in tabula depicta.”] ^j Bede, ibid. [Could it be St. Gregory's own litany ?]

A.D. 597. "cause new and uncertain, he could not presently
 "assent unto them, and leave the ancient custome
 "of the English, which had been for so long time
 "observed. But because they were strangers, coming "from far countries, to communicate to him and his
 "such things as they conceived were good and true,
 "he would not forbid any converts, whom their
 "preaching could persuade to their opinion, and also
 "would provide them necessaries for their comfort"able accommodation."

Ethelbert
 and others converted to the Christian faith

11. Hence Augustine, with his followers, advanced to Canterbury, to the aforesaid old church of St. Martin's. Here they lived so piously, prayed so fervently, fasted so frequently, preached so constantly, wrought miracles so commonly, that many people of inferior rank, and at last king Ethelbert himself was baptized, and embraced the Christian religion. The same Ethelbert also ordered that none should be forced into religion, having understood that Christ's service ought to be voluntary, and not compelled¹. And if his courtiers had been as cautious not to embrace religion for fashion, as the king was careful they should not receive it for fear, there had not at that time been made so many Christians for convenience probably rather than for conscience, who soon after returned again to paganism. However, as it is rendered a reason in the days of Hezekiah, why the Jews at so short warning so unanimously kept the passover, God had prepared the people, for the thing was done suddenly, so on the same account it came to pass that in so little a time, besides temporary believers, so many true and sincere converts embraced the Christian faith.

¹ Bede, Hist. Eccl. i. 26. [Usher, De Antiq. 68.]

12. Then Augustine by his letters¹ informed Gregory of the progress and proficiency of his pains in England^m. Gregory returned him a discreet answer, rejoicing with him, and advising of him, not to be puffed up by pride for the great miracles wrought by him; but, timendo gaudere, et gaudendo pertimescere. He minded him how, when the disciples triumphed at their casting out of devils, Christ more spiritualized their joy, rather to rejoice that their names were written in heavenⁿ. And indeed, as some eminent in piety never attained this honour, John (Baptist) did no miracle^o, so many, finally disavowed of God, as unknown unto him, shall plead for themselves, (and truly no doubt,) In thy name have we cast out devils^p. Yet this admonition of Gregory is with me, and ought to be with all unprejudiced persons, an argument beyond exception, that (though no discreet man will believe Augustine's miracles in the latitude of monkish relations) he is ignorantly and uncharitably peevish and morose, who utterly denies some miracles to have been really effected by him. About the same time St. Gregory sent from Rome Mellitus,

¹ [In this interval, and prior to the date of these letters, Augustine, who hitherto was only a monk, went over to Arles, according to Gregory's direction to be consecrated by Etherius the archbishop of that city. Upon his return into Britain he sent Laurentius a priest, and Peter a monk, to inform Gregory that the English nation had received Christianity, and that he had now received the episcopal dignity (se episcopum factum esse,) requesting Gregory's advice and direction how he should act in his new honours. Gregory's answer is dated 601. The date therefore in the margin should be nearer 601 than 597. With his answer Gregory also sent by Mellitus and the rest, who were appointed to assist St. Augustine, a pall, with directions for the appointment of bishops in England. Bede, ib. 27.]

^m [Bede, Hist. Eccl. i. 27--32.]

ⁿ Luke x. 17.

^o John x. 41.

^p Matt. vii. 22.

Gregory's answer to Augustine's
letters.

A.D. 600. Justus, Paulinus, and Ruffinianus, to be fellow-labourers with Augustine in the English harvest.

Conclusion of this century. 13. Thus was Kent converted to Christianity. For such as account this a conversion of all England, to make their words good, do make use of a long and strong synecdoche, a part for the whole, far more than half of the land lying some years after in the darkness of paganism; which others afterward enlightened with the beams of the gospel. But as he is esteemed the architect or master-workman, not who builds up most of the wall, but who first designeth the fabric and layeth the foundation thereof, in the same respect Augustine carrieth away the credit of all that came after him, because the primitive planter of the gospel amongst the Saxons. And it is observable that this conversion was done without any persecution, (yea, considerable opposition;) costing some pain, no torture, some sweat, no blood; not one martyr being made in the whole managing thereof. Meantime the poor Christian Britons, living peaceably at home, there enjoyed God, the gospel, and their mountains; little skilful in, and less caring for the ceremonies à la mode, brought over by Augustine: and indeed their poverty could not go to the cost of Augustine's silver cross, which made them worship the God of their fathers after their own homely but hearty fashion; not willing to disturb Augustine and his followers in their new rites, but that he had a mind to disquiet them in their old service, as in the sequel of the history will appear.

THE SEVENTH CENTURY.

AMICO SUO

GR. B.^a

Socrates interrogatus, quo philtro natura sympathias conciliaret, quidve esset in causa, ut alii hominum primo occursu ament medullitus, alii sibi mutuo sint infensi, hanc rationem reddidit :

Deus, inquit, ab æterno quicquid futurum esset animarum creavit; creatas, per immensum temporis spatium in uno cumulo collocavit; collocatas, corporibus, prout indies generantur, infundit. Hinc est, si contingat vel fortuitum consortium inter eos homines, quorum animæ in hoc acervo propinquiores, quod primo visu, quasi veteris vicinitatis memores, se invicem diligent; dum isti, primo intuitu, antipathie stimulis urgeantur, quorum animæ adversantes diametrice opponebantur.

Fateor commentum hoc Socraticum a theologia abhorrere; et in philosophia plurimis asystatis laborare. Quod si ei subesset tantum veritatis quantum ingenii, sanctissime voverem in hoc animarum cumulo tuam et meam contiguas olim jacuisse; cum te primum conspectum et animitus amarem, et a te redamarer.

UCH about this time pope Gregory ^{A. D. 601.} sent two archbishops' palls into Eng- Why the archibi- shop's see was re- moved from London to Canterbury. land; the one for London, the other for York^b. The former of these cities had been honoured with an archbishop's see some hundred years since king Lucius. But at the instance of Augustine, and by a new order of the foresaid

^a [See the Index.]

^b Rog. Wendover, Matth. Florileg. and Roff. Histor. [in an. 601. Usher, Antiq. 38-42.

For a description of these palls, see Harpsfield's Hist. Eccl.

Ang. p. 58.]

A. D. 601. Gregory, this pall sent to London was removed thence to Canterbury, whereof Augustine was made archbishop, and there, for the future, fixed and confirmed for several reasons. First, London already had lustre enough, being the biggest city in Britain: and it was needless to add new spiritual to her old temporal greatness: which conjoined, might cause pride in any one place, whilst divided, they might give honour to two cities. Secondly, London, by reason of the receipt thereof, was likely to prove the residing place for the English monarch: and it was probable that the archiepiscopal dignity would there be eclipsed and outshined by the regal diadem. Thirdly, had Augustine been archbishop of London, he might have seemed to succeed the British archbishops, and to have derived some right from them, contrary to his humour, who would lead all, but follow none: and therefore would not wear an old title, but have a span-new archbishop's chair carved out for himself. Lastly, Canterbury was the place wherein Christianity was first received by the Saxons, and therefore deserved to be honoured, to perpetuate the memory thereof. Thus London hereafter must be contented with the plain ~~song~~^{name} of a bishop, the mother being made a daughter, and must come behind Canterbury, which did much wrong, and perchance something trouble her. But churches have more discretion and humility than to break their hearts about earthly preëstolency: and the matter is not much which ~~see~~ went first when living, seeing our age hath laid them both alike level in their graves^b.

^b These remarks are incorrect and somewhat uncharitable. In the first place it is hardly probable that Christian-

2. Augustine thus armed with archiepiscopal authority, to shew a cast of his office by the aid of Ethelbert king of Kent, called a council for the Saxon and British bishops to come together, in the confines of the Wiccians and West-Saxons^c. An indifferent place for mutual ease, in midway betwixt both; haply presaging, that as their distant persons met on equal terms, so their opposite opinions might agree in some moderation. The particular place was called Augustine's Ake, (that is, his oak, in

ity had extended its influence, at present, much further than Kent; nor could ambition, or the fear of being eclipsed, furnish a motive for Augustine to remove from London to Canterbury, because Kent at this period was the most important kingdom of the Saxon heptarchy. As Kent was the first scene of St. Augustine's mission, and its king his first royal convert, it was hardly to be expected that the archbishop should fix his see at London, the capital of a kingdom which as yet had not risen into importance, and in all probability had not as yet received the Christian faith. For it was not till three years after, in 604, that Augustine sent Mellitus and Justus to preach to the West-Saxons (Flor. Wigorn. 604.) Furthermore, their kingdom was at this time dependant upon Kent, and London was governed by a viceroy appointed by Æthelbright, the king of Kent, (Saxon Chron. et Flor. Wigorn. an. 604. Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 3.) Another probable cause for Canterbury continuing to be the archiepiscopal see, when Canterbury was no longer from accidental causes the metropolis of this part of England, is given by William of Malmesbury, "Can-

" tuariz sedit primus Augusti-
" nus Gregorii magni disci-
" pulus, ut vulgo notum est.
" Pallium autem et privile-
" gium archiepiscopatus idem
" Gregorius Augustino ad Lun-
" doniam concessit, ut in primo
" libro gestorum regalium,
" per Kenulfi ostendimus epi-
" stolam; quia scilicet ad id
" tempus alterius obscuræ urbis
" notitia Romanos non atti-
" gisset. Verumtamen quia
" primus doctor, sedulitate re-
" gis hospitis et civium chari-
" tate captus, Cantuarie inco-
" latum vivens throno annis
" quindecim, et mortuus tu-
" mulo fovit, omnis eo in post-
" erum honor translatus." De gestis Pontif. f. 111, b.]

^c [Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 2. The date of this council is disputed. The different opinions respecting it are discussed at some length in Wilkins' Conc. I. 27. n. The most probable date is that assumed by Fuller.]

A. D. 601. our modern dialect,) which Stapleton (mistaken by the affinity of Wicci or Vecci, with Vectis, the Latin name for the Isle of Wight) seeketh near Southampton^a; where indeed he may find many oaks in the New forest, and yet miss the right one. For this oak stood in the confines of Worcester and Herefordshire^c, (though at this day time hath confounded it root and branch,) and therefore this meeting is in Latin called synodus Vigorniensis^d. Many solemn entertainments we know were anciently made under trees^e; and a palm-tree served Deborah for her Westminster-hall, wherein she judged Israel^b. But several reasons are assigned why Augustine kept this council under an oak. First, so public a place was free from exceptions; whereunto none were debarred access. Secondly, being congregated under the view of heaven, and not pent within the walls of a private house, they were minded of clear, fair, and open proceedings, without secret ends or sinister intents. Thirdly, perchance some pagan Saxons, allured with novelty, would repair to the council, whose jealousy was such, as in no case they would come under a roof for fear of fascination, as hath been formerly observed^f. Lastly, Augustine knowing that the pagan Britons performed their superstitions under an oak^g, celebrated his synod under the same, in some imitation, and yet a correction of their idolatry: as in a religious parallel, pagan temples had formerly by him been converted into churches of saints. But when

^a Translation of Bede, ib.

^c Gen. xviii. 4

^b Camden's Britannia, in Worcester-shire, p. 436.

^d Judges iv. 5

^e Suidas's Conc. I. 1. 7

^f This reason is given by us

[G. Wilkins, I. 24]

Henry Spelman, ib.

[G. Wilkins, I. 24]

^g See I. Cent. 4. 3. p. 4.

all is done, the matter is not so clear but that the A. D. 601. place called Augustine's Oak may as well be a town as a tree, so called from some eminent oak in, at, or near it: as the Vine in Hampshire, so named from vines anciently growing there, is a beautiful house and principal seat, where the barons Sandys have their habitation. And, what is most apposite for our purpose, Sozomen calleth the place where Theophilus kept a synod against St. Chrysostom, the Oak, which notwithstanding is notoriously known to have been a populous suburb of the city of Chalcedon.

3. At the first sessions of this synod there was a The British clergy refuse submission to the pope of Rome. very thin appearance of the Britons: of whom Augustine demanded that they should mutually contribute with him their pains to convert the heathen in Britain, and that they should submit to the pope, and embrace an uniformity with the Romish rites, especially in the celebration of Easter¹. What their answer was, it is pity it should be delivered in any other words than what the abbot of Bangor, being the mouth for the rest, represented as followeth; and let it shift as well as it can for its own authenticalness.

BID ispis a diogel i chwi yn bod ni holl vn ac arral, yn wridd ac ynn ostingedig i Egloys Duw, ac ir Paab o Ruvain, ac i Boob Kywir grissdion dwynol, y garu pawb yn i radd mewn kariad perfaith, ac i helpio pawb o honaunt, ar air a gueithred i vod ynn blant y Duw: ac amgenach vuyddod no hwn nidadwen i vod ir neb

Be it known and without doubt unto you, that we all are, and every one of us, obedient and subjects to the church of God, and to the pope of Rome, and to every godly Christian, to love every one in his degree in perfect charity, and to help every one of them, by word and deed to be the children of God: and other obedience than this I do not know due to him whom your name to be pope, not to be the Father of fathers, to be claimed and to be demanded. And this obedience we are ready to give, and to pay to him, and to every Christian continually. Besides, we are under the government of the bishop of Caerllion upon Tâb, who is to oversee under God over us, to cause us to keep the way spiritual.

¹ [And the administration of baptism according to the Romish custom. Bede, ib.]

A.D. 601. yr yddich chwi y hewi yn Paab ne in Daad o daade: yr gleimio ac yr orunn, ar weyd-dad hwn i'r idden ni yn raroed yr roddi ac yr dala iddo ef ac i pob Krisdian yn drageiddol. Heuid yr ydym ni dan llywod-rath esgob Caerllion ar Hysc, yr hien y sidd yngliger dan Dduw arnom ni, y mewthod i ni gadw fflord ysbrydol.

See we here the pedigree of the British church, which the shorter the ancienter, the fewer steps it had the higher it reached. They were subject in spiritual matters to the bishop of Caer-lion, and above him unto God, without any subordination unto the pope: so that it was more than a presumption that religion came into Britain, not by the semicircle of Rome, but in a direct line from the Asiatic churches¹⁰. We must not forget, that though many years since the archiepiscopal see of the Britons was removed from Caer-lion to St. David's, yet it still retained the title of Caer-lion, as of the first and most famous place.

The credit of this manuscript impugned

4. A late papist much impugneth the credit of this manuscript, as made since the days of king Henry the Eighth, and cavilleth at the Welsh thereof, as modern, and full of false spelling¹¹. He

¹⁰ Copied exactly many years since by sir Henry Spelman out of an ancient British manuscript of Mr. Peter Mosten, a Welsh gentleman; Spelman's Concilia, I 128

¹¹ [With which they agreed in their mode of tongue and observation of Easter.]

¹¹ For a copy of this quotation, in the present orthography of the Welsh, I am indebted to the Rev. J. Jones, of Christ Church, in this Univer-

need not have used so much violence to wrest it out A. D. 601. of our hands, who can part with it without considerable loss to ourselves, or gain to our adversaries; for it is but a breviate or abstract of those passages, which in Bede and other authors appear most true, of the British refusing subjection to the see of Rome. Whilst therefore the chapter is canonical, it matters not if the contents be apocrypha, as the additions of some well-meaning scribe. And though this Welsh be far later than the days of abbot Dinoth, and the English (added in the original) later than the Welsh, yet the Latin, as ancienter than both, containeth nothing contrary to the sense of all authors, which write this intercourse betwixt Augustine and the Welsh nation.

5. But this synod in fine proved ineffectual, the ^{The synod proves ineffectual.} British bishops refusing to submit, and Augustine to communicate with them without such submission. Whereupon, at Augustine's motion, a blind man was publicly presented amongst them, on whom the British bishops practised in vain with their prayers to restore him to his sight, which, at the request of Augustine to God, was presently and perfectly performed^o. This miracle convinced the Britons that Augustine was in the right for the critical observa-

sity: “Bid hysbys a diogel i “Bâb, neu yn Dad o dadau i'w “chwi ein bod ni oll, un ac “gleimio ac i'w ofyn. A'r ufydd“arall, yn ufydd ac yn os- “dod hwn yr ydym ni yn bar“tyngedig i Eglwys Duw, ac “od i'w roddi ac i'w dalu
 “i'r Pab o Rufain ac i bob “iddo ef ac i bob Cristion yn “cywir Gristion duwiol, i garu “dragwyddol. Hefyd yr ydym “pawb yn ei radd mewn cariad “ni dan lywodraeth esgob
 “perffaith; ac i helpio pawb “Caerllion ar Wysg, yr hwn
 “o honyn ar air a gweithred “y sydd yn olygwr, dan Dduw,
 “i fod yn blant i Dduw: ac “arnom ni i wneuthyd i ni “amgenach ufydd-dod no hwn “gadw'r ffordd ysbrydol.”] “nid adwaen i fod i'r neb yr
 “ydych chwi yn ei enwi yn

A.D. 601. tion of Easter. But yet they could not abire sumrum consensu ac licentia, without the national consent of their own people, and principal elders therein, renounce their ancient customs to embrace new practices. Indeed, as for their submitting to Augustine's jurisdiction, they apprehended it unsafe for the present, and mischievous for the future, having another civil government under kings of their own, and suspecting his spiritual power might in process of time intrench upon their temporal liberty.

The dialogue betwixt the British Bishops and the anchorites.

6. Departing hence, the Britons repaired to an aged anchorite, charactered by Beda to be sanctus et prudens, "holy and wise," (and none would wish his counsellor better qualified,) and craved his advice how hereafter they should behave themselves in the next synod, wherein they had promised to give Augustine a meeting: which out of our author may thus be dialogue-wise digested.

British Bishops. Anchorite.

Brit. B. Are we bound to desert our traditions at the preaching of Augustine?

Anch. If he be a man of God, follow him.

Brit. B. But how shall we be able to make trial thereof?

Anch. The Lord saith, *Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek, and lonely in heart*²⁹. If therefore this Augustine be mild, and humble in heart, it is credible that he himself beareth the yoke of Christ, and tendereth the same to be borne of you, but if he be cruel and proud, it appeareth that he is not of God, neither ought ye to heed what he saith.

Brit. B. But how shall we make discovery herein?

Arch. Contrive it so that he and his may come A. D. 601.
first into the place of the synod. And if he rise up when you draw near unto him, hear him then obediently, knowing him for a servant of Christ: but if he slighteth you, and vouchsafeth not to rise up unto you, seeing you are mo in number, let him be slighted by you.

Armed with these instructions, the British bishops advance to the second synod: where Augustine, pontifically sitting in his chair, at their entrance, entertained them only with neglect and contempt;
which by the Britons was accordingly requited.

7. Herein that stately prelate forgot St. Gregory's <sup>Proud Diotresses</sup> _{Augustine.} precept to him; Not to proceed too rigorously in the alteration of ceremonies, but to allow a latitude according to time and place^P. Oh for a little in him of St. Paul's temper, who was made all things to all men, that by all means he might gain some^q. Had Augustine's joints been suppled with the oil of humility, one bended knee might probably have bowed many hearts unto him; whereas now he lost their affections. Pride being an unwinning quality, rendering the proud party scorned by his betters, hated by his equals, feared, perchance, by his inferiors, but loved by none. Had not he, who is said to have cured the blind, need to have his own eyes opened herein? Who, though he be commonly called Augustine the Less, in distinction from his namesake, father St. Augustine of Hippo, yet may be allowed Augustine the Great, if a measure be taken from the dimensions of his pride and haughtiness.

8. We pass now from this Augustine's pride to ^{Augustine's} prophecy.

^P See his answer to Augustine's third question. [Bede, Hist. Eccl. i. 27.]

^q 1 Cor. ix. 22.

A. D. 601. his prophecy: who enraged at the British bishops, for denying subjection unto him, flatly fell a menacing them; that, seeing they would not submit to his motion, and join with him in preaching to the Saxons soon after they should feel the force of their enemies' sword, and be suddenly confounded by those whom they would not endeavour to convert. Which accordingly came to pass.

A. D. 603.
alias 605.
The massacre of the monks of Bangor.

9. For not long after, Ethelfrith, the pagan king of Northumberland, having conquered Chester, invaded Wales, and bade the Britons battle. Amongst them was a regiment of the monks of Bangor, all naked and unarmed, save with tears and prayers, whose volleys whereof they discharged to heaven for the good success of their countrymen, being all by themselves upon an advantage of ground, and one Broemail a Briton, as captain of their lifeguard, had a company of soldiers to defend them. Ethelfrith being informed that these monks prayed against him, concluded them to be his effectual enemies, though otherwise offering him no hostility: and fiercely falling on them, put twelve hundred of them to the sword, fifty only escaping: Broemail most basely deserting them whom he was set to defend.

Augustine
suspected to be their murderer

10. But here some birds sing a different note from the rest, which must be listened unto; namely, such authors, considerable for their number, antiquity, gravity, and learning, who accuse this Augustine for the designer of the death and destruction of those innocent British monks; so that he cunningly foretold what he himself cruelly intended to fulfil. Thus well might Jezabel, who calleth herself a prophetess, certainly foreshew the death of Naboth for denying his vineyard to Ahab, when she had purposely A. D. 603.

beforehand packed and plotted the same. An heavy accusation if true, that Augustine (to use my friend's expression^s) Gregorii vicarius should be gregis sica-rius; et futuræ ecclesiæ Anglicanæ conversor, should be præsentis Britannicæ eversor; so that instead of a prophet's reward, he deserved the punishment of a murderer. But to clear this point, conceive we a grand jury of four and twenty judicious readers im-pannelled, before whom the memory of Augustine is indicted of murder, and witnesses produced on both sides. Let none censure me if in these proceedings my pen fails in legal formalities, such exactness not being by me intended, but only some general conformity with a law-trial, to fix the history in our fancies with more pleasure and delight^t.

* Mr. Abraham Whelock, in his notes on Bede, p. 115.
[ed. 1644.]

^t [The words of Bede are positive, that this defeat of the Britons happened considerably after the death of St. Augustine:
“ Multo ante tempore ad co“ lestia regna sublatu.” (E. H.
ii. 2.) But in the year 604 St.
Augustine ordained Mellitus and Justus over the province of the East-Saxons. The date of this battle must therefore be referred to the year 607, as it is in the Saxon Chronicle, or to the year 613, which Usher has adopted, following the Ulster Chronicles, Antiq. E. B. p. 536.
This is also confirmed by the testimony of Florence of Worcester, a writer of extreme accuracy, especially in all questions relating to the chronology of our early history, thus narrating, by anticipation, in the year 603, this victory of Æthelfrith. “ Is etiam longo post “ tempore collecto exercitu ad “ civitatem Legionum, quæ a “ Brytonibus Carlegion appell“ latur, divino agente judicio, “ ut beatus prædixerat Augus-“ tinus archiepiscopus, ex Bry-“ tonum sacerdotibus, qui ad “ exorandum Deum pro milite “ bellum agente convenerant, “ mille ducentos prius extinxit.”

This charge against St. Augustine was first propagated, and probably forged by Geoffry of Monmouth, who has in this,
as in several other instances, confounded the customs of ancient with modern times. In the first place, St. Augustine himself never moved so far northward as Northumberland.
His ecclesiastical influence and authority extended little fur-

A. D. 603. 11. The bill first was solemnly read, running to this effect. "That Augustine the monk, commonly witness produced against him.
 " called the English apostle, not having the fear of " God before his eyes, out of forethought malice,
 " feloniously did plot, project, and contrive the " murder of twelve hundred monks at Bangor, by " soliciting Ethelbert, the Christian king of Kent,
 " to move Ethelfrith, the pagan king of Northum" berland, with force of arms to kill and slay the " monks aforesaid, &c." An accusation so heinous, that at first it filled the whole jury with silence,
 horror, and amazement; till afterwards they recollected themselves to attend unto the following witnessmen.

i. Jeffery Monmouth, whose Welsh blood was up, ther than the kingdom of Kent; what influence could he have over a king whom he never saw, perhaps never heard of, and who certainly was wholly ignorant of Christianity? Besides, Ethelfrith was continually engaged in war either with the Scots or the Britons, and needed no such motive to induce him to attack them. The words of Malmesbury, a writer of great judgment and fidelity, make this more apparent; for mentioning the wars in which Ethelfrith was engaged, as proofs of his great courage and success, he observes: "Testis est Legionum civitas, quae nunc simpliciter Cestria vocatur, queque ad id temporis a Britannis possessa, contumacis in regno populi albat superbum. Ad eumus oppugnationem cum intendisset amum, oppidam qui omnia per-

" peti quam obdurate mal-
 " lent, simul et numero con-
 " fusi, effuse in bellum ruerunt;
 " quos ille incisus exceptus
 " fudit sugaritque, prius in " monachos debucatissos, qui
 " pro salute exercitus supplici-
 " caturi frequenter cunctorum
 " ranc. Quorum incredibiliter
 " nostra state numerum fuisse
 " indicio sunt in vicino conve-
 " nio tot vernaculi parvus ec" clesiasticorum, tot asperitus per-
 " ticium, tanta turba ruderum,
 " quantum vix alibi videremus."
 Malmsh. De Gestis Reg. f. 4
 And after all St. Augustine did not state that the Britons should be destroyed at Bangor, but that if they refused to be at peace with the Saxons they should be destroyed by them. Considering the state of the island at that time, it required no great foresight to predict such an event.]

as concerned in the cause of his countrymen; A.D. 603.
 “ Ethelbert king of Kent,” said he, “ when he saw
 “ the Britons disdaining to yield subjection to Au“ gustine, and that they scorned to be subject to “ himself, stirred up the Northumberlanders, and “ other Saxon princes, that gathering a great army “ against the city of Bangor, they should go forth to “ destroy the abbot Dionoth, and the other clergy “ who had formerly slighted them^u.”

ii. Thomas Gray, an old chronicler, (as it is written in French,) brought in this evidence, “ that Augustine being refused of the Christian Britons, inflamed Ethelbertus king of Kent to levy his power, and to war against them, himself being also in company, (as in the old abstract of chronicles is recorded,) and marching with him towards the slaughter, where they had no more regard of mercy than a wolf hath upon a sheep^w.”

iii. Nicholas Trivet, a Dominican, who wrote some three hundred years since, deposed, “ that Æthelbyrht king of Kent, being highly offended, incited Æthelfrith king of Northumberland, and other petty Saxon kings, because they had contemned Augustine in the council, &c.^x”

iv. Essebiensis Monachus, commenting on those words of Merlin, delebitur iterum religio, “ religion shall again be destroyed,” thus expoundeth them;

^u Manuscript. in pub. Lib. Cantab. p. 167, [quoted by Whelock, ib. See Monmouth, De Gestis, p. 93.]

^w Cited in Jewel's Apolog. part i. chap. ii. p. 11. [ed. fol. 1609. This Chronicle, with the exception of the earlier portion of it, embracing the period antecedent to the conquest, has been edited by Jos. Stevenson, esq., and published by the Maitland Club, 1836.]

^x Spelman's Conc. I. 111. [Wilkins, I. 27.]

A. D. 603. "This was afterwards fulfilled, either by Cormund
"or by Augustine, who caused twelve hundred "monks to be slain at Bangor in Wales, because
"they obeyed him not in a council."

These testimonies much moved the jury¹; who, notwithstanding, reserved their other ear, as it became honest men, to hearken to the depositions in Augustine's behalf.

Testimonies in his behalf. 12. Amongst these that of Bede was most material: Sicque completum est præsagium sancti pauli fieis Augustini, quamvis ipso jam multo ante tempore ad caelestia regna sublato, ut etiam temporalis interitus ultimo sentirent perfidi, quod oblati sibi perpetua salutis consilia spreverant². Which words (for it is seasonably remembered all plead must now be in English) may thus be translated; "And so the prophecy of holy bishop Augustine was fulfilled, (although himself long before that was taken out of this life to the kingdom of heaven,) that also the treacherous people might feel the revenge of temporal ruin, because they had despised the counsels of eternal salvation offered unto them."

*The paragraph in Bede's testimony
questioned.* 13. Much difference arose hereabouts; the rather, because some urged that parenthesis ("although himself long before," &c.) to have been studiously interpolated in Bede, on purpose for the purgation of Augustine by some in afterages that favoured him; alleging that it is not in the ancient Saxon copies.

¹ MS. in Bennet Coll. Libr. Camb. [quoted by Whelock, lib.]

² All these authorities might be reduced to one, Geoffrey of Monmouth, whom the others implicitly followed.]

² Hist. Ecccl. in 2. ed. Whel.

Geoffry of being put in as a piece of new cloth into an old garment, with intent to fill it up, but in event making it worse; because this passage checketh the pen of Bede in the full speed thereof (no less against the rules of history than of horsemanship) as he was writing the life of Augustine, the story whereof notwithstanding still runs on, and continues until the end of the next chapter^b. Here some of the jury betook themselves to the point of chronology, as most proper to decide the matter now depending; but such was the variety of authors, that no certainty could thence be extracted. For though the massacre of the monks of Bangor is generally noted to be anno 603^c, which falls out before the death of Augustine, yet the Annals of Ulster, whose authority is not to be contemned, observe the same in the year 613^d, which undoubtedly was after Augustine's decease.

14. Then a second sort of witnesses presented <sup>Mr. Fox his moderation much moveth the jury.</sup> themselves, as M. Parker^e, bishop Jewel^f, and others, somewhat sharp against Augustine in their expressions; which wrought the less with the jury, partly because of such authors their known oppo-

^b [In all the MSS. which Dr. Smith consulted for his edition of Bede, this clause is to be found, as also in the three which Whelock used for his edition. I have myself consulted several MSS. in order to ascertain the authenticity of the passage, but with the same result; in none was the passage wanting or interpolated. Upon this point indeed the authority of the Saxon translation is of little weight; for it varies materially in other passages from the original, omitting some and adding others.]

^c Matt. West. [in an. 603. But the words of this writer imply that this attack on the monks of Bangor happened after this year: "Non multo "post," &c.] Chichestr. MS. Bibl. pub. Cantabrig. [quoted by Whelock, ib.]

^d Usher, Brit. Antiq. p. 1157=536.

^e Antiq. Britan. p. 71.

^f Apology, ib.

A. D. 603. sition to the Romish church, and partly because of their modern writing, almost a thousand years after the matter in fact. Only the moderate testimony of reverend Mr. Fox much moved the whole court, as one throughly well affected in religion, and averse from all popery and cruelty, thus expressing himself: “ But that seemeth rather suspicious than true, that “ he (Ethelbert) being a Christian king, either could “ so much prevail with a pagan idolater, or else “ would attempt so far to commit such a cruel deed. “ But of uncertain things I have nothing certainly to “ say, less to judge.” This, I say, prevailed so far with the jury, that consulting with themselves, they found an ignoramus. With whose commendable charity I concur; preferring rather to clear a twilight innocence into noonday, than to darken it into midnight.

The blood of Bangor monks revenged.

15. To return to the monks of Bangor. Their innocent blood went not long unrevenge^d: for we find recorded^b, how three British princes, namely, Blederic¹ duke of Cornwall, Margadue duke of South-Wales, and Cadwan, duke of North-Wales, bade battle to the Northumblanders as they were invading Wales, and not only dangerously wounded the aforesaid Ethelfrith their king, but also discomfited his army, and slew ten thousand and sixty of his soldiers, forcing him at last to articles of composition; that he should confine himself within his own country, north of Trent, and leave all Wales to be entirely and peaceably enjoyed by the Britons, the true owners thereof.

^a Martyrology, I. 154. ed. 1641. But this defeat is altogether unnoticed by writers of any creditable authority.)

^b Travet, in Spelman's Concile, lib. (See Wilkins, i. 27)

16. However here, to our great grief, we are fain ^{A. D. 603.} to take our farewell, for some hundreds of years, of Farewell taken for some years of the British church. the British church, wanting instructions concerning the remarkable particulars thereof. Yet Dr. Harpsfield deserves a check, both for his false ground-work, and presumptuous inference built thereuponⁱ. For first, he slighteth the British nation, as such an one, as since this their dissenting from Augustine, and the Romish church in ceremonies, never achieved any actions of renown, or mounted to any eminency in the world. Then he imputeth their being so long depressed, and at last subdued by the English, as a just punishment of God, on their not complying with Rome: so pragmatical a prier he is into divine secrets. But he who thus casteth forth a national abuse, can never see where such a stone lighteth; for (besides the nation for the time being) their posterity engaged therein have just cause either to find or make reparation to themselves. I could, and would myself assert the British from his scandalous pen, were it not against the rules of manners and discretion, to take this office out of the hands of some of their own nation, for whom it is more proper, as they are more able to perform it.

17. Only give me leave to insert a line or two Commendation of so the British language. (some pleasant discourse will not do amiss after so much sad matter) in commendation of the British tongue, and vindication thereof, against such as causelessly traduce it. First, their language is native. It was one of those which departed from Babel: and herein it relates to God, as the more immediate author thereof; whereas most tongues in ⁱ Hist. Eccles. Angl. sec. vii. c. 39. p. 114.

A.D. 603. Europe owe their beginning to human depraving of some original language. Thus the Italian, Spanish, and French, daughters or nieces to the Latin, are generated from the corruption thereof. Secondly, unmixed. For though it hath some few foreign words, and useth them sometimes, yet she rather accepteth them out of state than borroweth them out of need, as having besides these, other words of her own to express the same things. Yea, the Romans were so far from making the Britons to do, that they could not make them to speak as they would have them: their very language never had a perfect conquest in this island. Thirdly, unaltered. Other tongues are daily disguised with foreign words, so that in a century of years they grow strangers to themselves: as now an Englishman needs an interpreter to understand Chaucer's English. But the British continues so constant to itself, that the prophecies of old Taliesin (who lived above a thousand years since) are at this day intelligible in that tongue. Lastly, durable; which had its beginning at the confusion of tongues, and is likely not to have its ending till the dissolution of the world.

Causerely
induced by
ignorance. 18. Some indeed inveigh against it, as being hard to be pronounced, having a conflux of many consonants, and some of them double-sounded: yea, whereas the mouth is the place wherein the office of speech is generally kept, the British words must be uttered through the throat. But this rather argues the antiquity thereof, herein running parallel with the Hebrew, (the common tongue of the old world, before it was enclosed into several languages,) and hath much affinity therewith, in jointing of words with affixes, and many other correspondencies. Some also cavil, that it grates and tortures the ears of A.D. 603. hearers with the harshness thereof; whereas indeed it is unpleasant only to such as are ignorant of it. And thus every tongue seems stammering which is not understood; yea, Greek itself is barbarism to barbarians. Besides, what is nicknamed harshness therein, maketh it indeed more full, stately, and masculine. But such is the epicurism of modern times, to addulce all words to the ear, that (as in the French) they melt out, in pronouncing, many essential letters, taking out all the bones to make them bend the better in speaking: and such hypocrites in their words speak them not truly in their native strength, as the plaindealing British do, which pronounce every letter therein more manly, if less melodious. Lastly, some condemn it unjustly as a worthless tongue, because leading to no matter of moment; and who will care to carry about that key which can unlock no treasure? But this is false; that tongue affording monuments of antiquity, some being left, though many be lost; and mo had been extant but for want of diligence in seeking, and carefulness in preserving them.

19. But, craving pardon of the reader for this digression, we reassume our Augustine, who all this ^{Augustine baptizeth 10,000 in one day.} while was very industrious, and no less successful in converting the Saxons to the Christian faith. Inso-much that a certain author reporteth^k, how in the river Swale near Richmond in Yorkshire^l, Augustine

^k Cited by Mr. Camden, “ fragment of a nameless au-preface of Brit. p. 98. “ thor cited by Camden, fol.

^l [Dr. Heylyn makes the “ 136 [p. 98.], who tells the following remarks upon this “ story otherwise than our au-passage. “ The ‘certain author’ “ thor doth. For though the “ whom he means is an old “ fragment tells us that the

A.D. 603, on one day baptized above ten thousand; adding withal, that the people not only passed without danger through so deep a river, but also they who were sick and deformed when they went in, were whole and handsome when they came forth again¹. The judicious reader may in this miracle discover how the author thereof (no doubt some ignorant monk) hath therein jumbled and confounded three distinct scripture histories, to make a mock parallel betwixt the rivers Jordan and Swale; borrowing

1. The people's safe passing through it, from Joshua's conducting the Israelites through Jordan².

2. Their being baptized in it, from John's baptizing the Jews in Jordan³.

3. The curing of their infirmities by it, from Elisha's healing Naaman's leprosy in Jordan⁴.

But here it must be remembered, that Bede maketh no mention at all hereof, and ascribeth this numerous baptizing to Paulinus archbishop of York many years after. It would argue too much monosity in us, to demur in our faith to the whole fact, till authors are all agreed about the doer thereof.

" river was called Swale, yet
" that it was the river Swale
" near Richmond in Yorkshire
" is the addition of our au" thor, -- -- "I shall concur
" with the old fragment as to
" the name of the river, and
" yet not carry Austin out of
" Kent, and much less into
" Richmondshire to perform
" that office. For when we " find in Camden that the " Medway falling into the " Thames is divided by the " Isle of Sheppey into two

" great branches, of which the
" one is called East-Swale, the " other West-Swale, I see no " reason why we should look
" elsewhere for the river Swale
" mentioned in the old frag" ment." Camden in Kent, fol. 333. (p. 236.) Examen
Historicum, p. 33.

= Porter's Flowers of the Saints, p. 513.

¹ Job iv. 1.

² Matt. iii. 6.

³ 2 Kings v. 14.

For mine own part, I conceive Paulinus the more A.D. 603.
probable person, as questioning whether Augustine,
most conversant amongst the South and West-Saxons, ever moved so far northward^q.

20. And if so many were baptized in one day, it <sup>The simplicity of ancient baptism.</sup> appears plainly that in that age the administration of that sacrament was not loaded with those superstitious ceremonies, as essential thereunto, of crossing, spittle, oil, cream, salt, and such like trinkets; which protestants generally as little know what they are, as papists why they use them. I say, in that age nothing was used with baptism but baptism; the word and the water made the sacrament. Yea, the archbishop is said to have "commanded by the " voice of criers, that the people should enter the " river confidently, two by two, and, in the name of " the Trinity, baptize one another by turns^r." This, indeed, was the most compendious way; otherwise Joshua's day, wherein the sun stood still, had been too short for one man's personal performance of such an employment.

21. Another considerable accession was made to Christianity in the south-west part of this isle, and particularly in Dorsetshire; where Augustine at <sup>Heale destroyed by Augustine
at Cern.</sup> Cern destroyed the idol of Heale, or Æsculapius, which the Saxons formerly adored^s. But in his journey hither, (reader, they are not mine, but my

^q [Dr. Smith inclines to this opinion. See his Appendix to Bede, c. viii. p. 693. No mention of this circumstance occurs in the earlier and more authentic writers; as Bede, the Saxon Chronicle, Florence of Worcester; nor in the life of St. Augustine written by Goscelinus between the 11th and 12th centuries, and published by Wharton in the Ang. Sacr. II. 56.]

^r Camden, ib.

^s Camden's Brit. in Dorsetshire, [p. 155.]

A.D. 603. author's words,) "with his holy company,—being
 " cruelly oppressed with the three familiar discom-
 " modities of travellers, hunger, thirst, and wear-
 " i ness;"—Augustine, "striking his staff into the " ground, there straight sprung forth a clear fountain
 " of crystal streams, in which all his fellows quenched
 " the extremity of their thirst. And the same place
 " was afterward called Cernel, a name composed of " Latin and Hebrew; for cerus in Latin, signifies
 " to see, and el in Hebrew, signifies God!." A compo" sition of a name hardly to be preecedented, that a
 " word should commence per saltum from Latin into
 " Hebrew without taking Greek by the way thererof.
 " Why not rather Cernurell, "Behold the fountain;" or Ceruheat, "See the destruction of the idol?" But in " truth, in all books ancient and modern, the place is " plainly written Cerne, without any paragogical appo-
 " sition thereunto.

A ridicu"lous mira"cle.

22. Indeed, most of the miracles assigned unto this Augustine, intended with their strangeness to raise and heighten, with their levity and absurdity do depress and offend true devotion. Witness, how when the villagers in Dorsetshire beat Augustine and his fellows, and in mockery fastened fish-tails at their backs, in punishment hereof, "all that generation had that given them by nature, which so contemptibly they fastened on the backs of these " holy men."¹ Fie for shame! he needs an hard place on his face that reports it, and a soft place in his head that believes it.

¹ H. Porter's Flowers of the Saints, p. 516. But this etymology, as well as the legend below, are from Malmesbury, t. 142, b.

² So both in Camden, Brit. ibid., and Harpsfield, Hist. Eccl. p. 723.

³ H. Porter's Flowers of the Saints, p. 515.

23. However, for the main, we undoubtedly believe that the preaching of Augustine and his fellows took good effect, finding the visible progress and the improvement thereof, in the conversion of so many from paganism to Christianity. For Sæbyrht king of Essex (nephew to Æthelbyrht king of Kent, by Ricola his sister) embraced the faith^x, with all his kingdom, by the ministry of Mellitus, whom Augustine ordained bishop of London; much about the same time making one Justus a Roman (who was vir sui nominis, a man answering his name) bishop of Rochester. Many other remarkable matters happened in the life of Augustine, especially those questions and answers which passed betwixt him and Gregory the Great, by us purposely omitted, partly because they are too voluminous to insert, and partly because they are at large in many authors, to whom we remit the reader^y.

24. And now was the time come of Augustine's dissolution, whose body was buried in the northern porch of the new church in Canterbury, dedicated to Peter and Paul, having, as Bede informs us^z, this inscription written upon his monument; “Here resteth lord Augustine the first archbishop of Canterbury; who being in times past sent hither from blessed Gregory, bishop of the Roman city, and supported of God by the working of miracles, brought king Ethelbert and his country, from the ^x [In 604, the same year in which Mellitus and Justus were ordained, Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 3. Saxon Chron., and Flor. Wigorn. in an. 604. The kingdom of the East-Saxons, which Fuller calls Essex, included Essex, Middlesex, and part of Hertfordshire.]

^y Bede, Hist. Eccl. i. 27. Fox's Book of Martyrs, i. 150, and others.

^z Eccl. Hist. ii. 3.

A.D. 610. “worshipping of idols to the faith of Christ: and “the days of his office being finished in peace, he “died the seventh of the calends of June, the same “king reigning.”

The date of the year, how wanting therein. 25. But in this epitaph one thing is wanting, and that mainly material; namely, the year when he died. Strangely is that watch contrived, and is generally useless, which shews the minute of the hour, not the hour of the day. As this epitaph points at the day, of smaller consequence, leaving out the year, of greater concernment. This hath put men's fancies on various conjectures. Some make it a mere omission of Bede; which notwithstanding is very strange, because otherwise he is most critical and punctual in the notation of time. Others conceive it a fault of commission, in some of after-ages, who purposely expunged the year, (the shrew their fingers that thrust out the eyes, the date of this epitaph,) lest the same should make too clear discoveries of Augustine's surviving after the massacre of the monks of Bangor, which would increase the suspicion of his having a finger therein. Others place the neglect in the monument-maker, and not in Bede; seeing he was but the bare relater of the epitaph, and therefore loath to add or alter any thing thereof. Perchance the tomb-maker registered the day, as a nicely most likely to be forgotten, omitting the year, as a thing generally, universally, and notoriously known, all men keeping a record thereof, which in process of time became wholly forgotten. Thus those things are not long effectually kept by any which are equally to be kept by all, and not charged on any one man's particular account. Sure I am, the setting up of this landmark, the noting of the year of his death, had A.D. 610. given excellent direction to such as travel in the Saxon chronology, who now wander at random for the want of it^a.

26. And now we take our farewell of Augustine, Farewell to St. Augustine. of whom we give this character. He found here a plain religion (simplicity is the badge of antiquity) practised by the Britons, living some of them in the contempt, and many more in the ignorance of worldly vanities, in a barren country: and surely piety is most healthful in those places where it can least surfeit of earthly pleasures. He brought in a religion spun with a coarser thread, though guarded with a finer trimming, made luscious to the senses with pleasing ceremonies; so that many, who could not judge of the goodness, were courted with the gaudiness thereof. Indeed the papists brag that he was the apostle of the English; but not one in the style of St. Paul, neither from men, nor by man, but by Jesus Christ^b; being only a derivative apostle, sent by the second hand: in which sense also he was not our sole apostle; though he first put in his sickle, others reaped down more of the English har-

^a [The date of St. Augustine's death ought probably to be fixed at an earlier period than the year 610. For in that year Mellitus brought letters from pope Boniface IV., directed to archbishop Laurentius, the successor of St. Augustine. If the destruction of the monks of Bangor happened in the year 607, then the death of St. Augustine must have happened between 604 and 607. (See the previous note, p. 155.) But according to Goscelinus, in his life of this archbishop, St. Augustine appointed Laurentius his successor the same year in which he died. Vita August. ch. 38. Angl. Sacr. II. p. 70. So also the annals of Rochester, in the Ang. Sacr. I. 85. Little doubt therefore can exist but that St. Augustine died in 604, to which opinion Wharton entirely inclines. See his masterly discussion of the subject in his Ang. Sacr. I. 89.]

^b Gal. i. 1.

A.D. 610. vest, propagating the gospel further, as shall appear hereafter. But because the beginnings of things are of greatest consequence, we commend his ~~pride~~, condemn his pride, allow his life, approve his learning, admire his miracles, admit the foundation of his doctrine Jesus Christ ; but refuse the hay and stubble he built thereupon. We are indebted to God his goodness in moving Gregory. Gregory's carefulness in sending Augustine. Augustine's forwardness in preaching here : but above all, let us bless God's exceeding great favour, that that doctrine which Augustine planted here but impure, and his successors made worse with watering, is since, by the happy reformation, cleared and refined to the purity of the scriptures.

Laurentius succeeded Augustine. 27. After the death of Augustine, Laurentius a Roman succeeded him, whom Augustine in his life-time not only designed for, but ordained in that place^c, out of his abundant caution, that the infant church might not be orphan an hour, lest Satan should assault the breach of such a vacancy, to the disadvantage of religion. Such a superordination in such cases was canonical, it being a tradition, that St. Peter in like manner consecrated Clement his successor in the church of Rome^d. And sure it is, the prophet Elijah, no doubt to his great comfort whilst living, anointed Elisha to minister in his room, in his prophetical function^e. In one respect Laurentius exceeded Augustine, that he reduced the recusant Britons and Scots (probably demeaning himself more humbly than his predecessor) to some tolerable conformity to the Romish ceremonies, especially in the celebration of Easter. A.D. 610.

^c Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 4.

^d Ibid.

^e 1 Kings xii. 16.

Now, seeing frequent mention hath formerly been made of the difference between the Romish and British churches, in observation of that festival; we will endeavour, as truly as briefly, to state the controversy betwixt them, with arguments each side produceth in their own behalf.

28. But because the point in hand is so nice The controversy about Easter betwixt Rome and the Britons stated. (rather than necessary) that a little variation therein may be material, I will carefully follow the truest and the copy I can get, in stating the question, taking it from a learned pen^f exactly skilled therein.

“ The Romans kept

“ The Britons kept

“ Easter upon that Sunday

“ Easter upon the Sun-

“ which fell betwixt the 15th and “ day that fell betwixt the “ 21st day of the moon^g (both

“ 14th and 20th day of the “ terms included) next after the

“ moon, following in their

^f James Usher, in the Religion of the ancient Irish, p. 66. [This was first published at the end of a treatise entitled, “ A friendly advertisement to the pretended Catholics of Ireland, by Christoph. Sibthorp, knight, one of his majesty’s justices for Ireland.” 4°. 1622. It contains much research upon the doctrine and practice of the early church of Ireland, much illustration of the state of religion among the Britons. Besides Usher, Dr. Smith, in his Appendix to Bede, has devoted several pages to the examination of this intricate controversy. In the Tanner MSS. in the Bodleian, is also preserved a paper of considerable length, by the celebrated mathematician Dr. Wallis, on the same subject.

In this observation of Easter (as well as in other points) the Britons followed the eastern churches. A dispute on the same subject also existed among the Spaniards and the Franks. The latter observing its celebration on the 18th of April, the former on the 21st of March. The Romans professed to follow the order of the Nicene council in their celebration of Easter; but as they reckoned by the moon and the golden numbers, it not unfrequently happened that they fell into that very error which they wished to avoid. See also archbishop Parker’s Antiq. 585. Usher, Antiq. p. 485 sq.]

^g Hence is it that Beza tartly termeth the controversy lunatica questio.

A.D. 610. " 21st day of March, which they accounted to be the seat of the vernal equinoctial. And in reckoning the age of the moon, they followed the Alexandrian cycle of 19 years, as it was explained unto them by Dionysius Exiguus."

" account thereof, not the nineteen years' computation of Anatolius, but Sulpitius Severus his cycle of eighty-four years."

It is enough to prove the practice of Rome was the right, that it was the practice of Rome; yea, did it not deserve the stab of excommunication, for any dissenting from her practice, tantamountingly to give her the lie! However, it seems the reputation of Rome's infallibility was yet in the monachal thereof, that the British durst so boldly differ from them, without danger of damnation.

29. Yea, they pretended ancient tradition on their side, from the primitive times, derived from St. John himself; as by the ensuing verses (which we thought fit to translate) may appear:

Nos seriem patriam, non frivola scripta tenemus, Discipulo Eusebii^b Polycarpo dante Johannis.
Ille etenim bis septenæ sub tempore Pharbe
Sanctum prefixit nobis fore pascha culendum,
Atque nefas dixit, si quis contraria sentit^c.

No writings fond we follow, but do hold
Our country course, which Polycarp of old,
Scholar to blessed John, to us hath given.
For he, when the moon had finish'd days twice seven,
Bade us to keep the holy paschal time,
And count dissenting for an heinous crime.

Time was, when once the activity of Peter and John ^b I.e. sancti, vel beati.

loc in Acta SS. Benedictus.

^c Fridodus in the life of Wilfrid, (published by Mabill.)

are in part i. p. 176. ed. Paria. 1672.]

with holy zeal was excellently employed, contending A.D. 610. in a race which should first come to the grave of our Saviour^l: but see here the Romans and the Britons, the pretended followers of these two apostles, not running, but wrestling in a violent contention who should most truly observe the resurrection of Christ out of his grave.

30. Strange, that so good and wise men should thus fall out about the mint and cummin of religion, <sup>The controversy reconciled by Laurentius.</sup> a ceremony not at all decided in scripture. It is to be feared, that the when marred the how of Easter; and the controversy about the time spoiled a more material circumstance, of the manner of keeping this feast; these opposite parties scarce being mutually in charity at the receiving of the sacrament, at that solemn festival kept among the Jews with unleavened bread, celebrated among Christians with too much leaven (sour and swelling) of anger and passion. The best is, for the present A.D. 613. Laurentius composed the quarrel, and brought both Britons and Scots^m, that is, the inhabitants of Ireland, to comply with the Romans therein. But as every small wrench, or stepping awry, is enough to put an ill-set bone out of joint, so each petty animosity was great enough to discompose this agreement. But enough of this controversy for the present, we shall meet it too soon again; which, like a restless ghost, will haunt our English history for more than an hundred and fifty years together.

31. Only I will add, that although about Augustine's time this controversy was then most height-^{The antiquity of this difference.}ened and inflamed, yet an old grudge it was long

^l John xx. 4.

^m Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 4.

A.D. 613, before betwixt the Romans and Britons. For, if old Taliesin (styled chief of bards by the Britons) lived (as Pitcairn, a catholic writer will have it^a) in the year 540, and if the following verses be Taliesin's, as it is undoubtedly believed^b, then this difference was on foot fifty years before Augustine came into England.

*Gwae offiriad byd
Nys engrifflia gryd
Ac ny phregetha:
Gwae ny cheidw ey goid
Ac ef yn rugail
Ac nys areilia:
Gwae ny cheidw ey dherwaid
Rhac bleidhau Rhufnioid Ai ffon gnicoppa.*

Woe be to that priest yborn
That will not cleanly weed his corn,
And preach his charge among:
Woe be to that shepherd (I say)
That will not watch his fold alway,
As to his office doth belong.
Woe be to him that doth not keep
From Romish wolves his sheep
With staff and weapon strong?.

These words, "from Romish wolves," relate to the vigilancy of the British pastors to keep their people from Rome's infection in these points. Thus whilst the Britons accounted the Romans wolves, and the

^a De Britan. Scriptoribus, p. 95. ^b Austin the monk into England, and not fifty or sixty

^a Chron. of Wales, p. 254. ^b years before, as others have

^a P [Archbishop Usher, from whom Fuller quotes these lines, the ancient Irish, p. 8c. The comes to a far more probable conclusion, that they were Llloyd.]

written "after the coming of

Romans held the Britons to be goats, what became A.D. 613. of Christ's little flock of sheep the whiles? The best is, the good God, we hope, will be merciful in his sentence on men, though passionate men be merciless in their censures on one another.

32. To return to Laurentius. The great joy for A.D. 616. the agreement made by him was quickly abated ^{The death of Æthel-} with grief, at the death of king Æthelbyrht^q: who ^{byrht, and decay of Christian-} having reigned fifty-six, and been a Christian one ^{ity.} and twenty years, was buried nigh to his good wife, queen Bertha, who died a little before him, in the porch of St. Martin's church in Canterbury; which fabric, with some other churches, by him were beautifully built, and bountifully endowed. In Æthelbyrht's grave was buried much of the Kentish Christianity: for Eadbald his son both refused his father's religion, and wallowing in sensuality, was guilty of that sin not so much as named amongst the Gentiles, in keeping his father's second wife. Such as formerly had took up Christianity, as the court fashion, now left it; and whom Æthelbyrht's smiles had made converts, Eadbald's frowns quickly made apostates. Yea, at the same time (so infectious are the bare examples of great men) the three sons of the king of the East-Saxons fell back to paganism^r. These refused to be baptized, and yet in derision demanded of the bishop Mellitus to receive the eucharist; which he flatly denied them, baptism being an introductory sacrament, and it being un-

^q Feb. 24. [Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 5. Malmesb. De Gestis Reg. f. 4, b.]

^r [They had always continued pagans, but their father Saberct having died the same year with Æthelbyrht, they succeeded and encouraged idolatry. Their names were Sere- red, Siward, and Sigebert. See Bede, ib. Flor. Wigorn. in 616. Parker, Antiq. p. 75.]

A.D. 616. lawful to break into the church without going through this porch. Yet they gave Mellitus fair warning, and free leave to depart; who coming into Kent, held there a council with Laurentius and Justus what was best to be done. At last they concluded that it was in vain prodigally to lose their pains here, which they might expend with more profit in their own country: and seeing martyrdom, as it is not cowardly to be declined, so it is not ambitiously to be affected; they resolved to go the way which Divine providence directed them, and to return into France: which Mellitus and Justus did accordingly.

Mellitus and Justus their departure defended.

33. Was this well done of them, to leave their charge? Did not God place them sentinels in his church, and could they come off from their duty before they were relieved by order? But surely their ill-usage was an interpretative discharge unto them. In warrant whereof we have not only Christ's precept, to leave the unworthy house with a witness, namely, with the dust of our feet shaken off as a testimony against it¹, but also his practice, going from the Gadarenes, when they desired he should depart their coasts². Indeed, the word of life is a quick commodity, and ought not, as a drug, to be obtruded on those chapmen who are unwilling to buy it; yea, in whose nostrils the very savour of life unto life doth stink, because proffered unto them.

Laurentius, intending to depart, rebuked.

34. Laurentius entertained the like resolution of departure; when, lying on his bed, St. Peter is said to have taken him to task in a vision³. Yea, St.

¹ Matt. x. 14.

² Matt. viii. 34, and ix. 1.

³ Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 6.

Peter was not only seen, but felt, sharply and soundly A. D. 616. whipping him, for his unworthy intention to forsake his flock ; who rather should have followed St. Peter's example, as he imitated Christ's, whom no losses or crosses could so deter, as to desert his charge. Some will say, Peter herein appeared a partial parent, so severely disciplining this his son, whilst two other of his children, being more guilty, Mellitus and Justus, who had actually done what Laurentius only designed, escaped without any correction. But we must know, though these seemed more faulty by what appears in open view, yet the passages behind the curtain (considerables concealed from us) might much alter the case. And indeed, pastors leaving their people is so ticklish a point, and subject to such secret circumstances, that God and their own consciences are only the competent judges of the lawfulness or unlawfulness thereof.

35. Thus, all black and blue, Laurentius repaireth Eadbald to Eadbald king of Kent, and presenteth himself becomes a Christian. unto him in that sad condition. The king, much amazed thereat, demands who durst offer such violence to so good a man ? Whereby it plainly appears, that though Eadbald himself refused Christianity, yet he afforded civility and protection to Laurentius, and to all in Kent of his religion. He largely relates what had happened unto him, and in fine so prevailed on Eadbald, that he not only put away his wife-mother-whore, but also embraced Christianity, and at his desire Justus and Mellitus returned again into England.

36. Rochester readily received Justus their bishop, A. D. 618. being a little place, of few persons, and they therefore the easier all to be brought to be of one mind. Justus received at Rochester,

A.D. 618. But large London (though then, for greatness, but and Mellitus, the suburbs to the present city) I say, London then, ^{was rejected at London.} was even London then, as wanton in the infancy, as now wayward in the old age thereof; where generally the people, long radicated in wickedness, refused to entertain their good pastor returning unto them. But here my good friend⁶, in his notes on this passage, makes an ingenious reservation, that (though the major part must be confessed peevish in all populous places) London in all ages afforded eminent favourers of learned and religious men. And would I could, being the meanest of ministers⁷, as truly entitle myself to the foresaid qualifications, as I heartily concur with him in my grateful confession, that I have effectually found plenty of good patrons in that honourable corporation. Mellitus thus rejected, was glad to lead a private life in London, till that after the death of Laurentius⁸, he succeeded him in the church of Canterbury.

^{Mellitus his character.} 37. A grave and good man, but much afflicted with the gout, and highly meriting of his see of Canterbury; especially if true what Bede reports⁹, that when a grievous fire happened in that city, Mellitus accosted the very fury thereof with faithful prayer and his own bare hands, (strange! that no modern monk hath since in his relation put a crucifix or holy-water-sprinkle into them,) and so presently quenched the raging of the flames. Say not, why could he not as easily have cured his own gout as quenched this fire? seeing miracles are done, not for men's ordinary ease, but God's solemn honour. Yea, A.D. 618. the apostles themselves were not at pleasure masters of their miraculous power for their personal use, seeing St. Paul could neither cure the often infirmities of his dear son Timothy^z, nor remove the acute desperate disease wherewith he himself in Asia was afflicted^a. Five years sat Mellitus in Canterbury: after whose death^b Justus bishop of Rochester succeeded him, and had his pall solemnly sent him by pope Boniface^c.

⁶ Mr. Whelock on the place in Bede. ^{ton's Angl. Sac. I. 91. Flan-} ^{rence of Worcester places his}

⁷ He was minister of the Savoy. ^{death in the year 621.} ^{Hist. Eccl. ii. 7}

⁸ Feb. 2, 619. (See Whar.

38. By the way, the pall is a pontifical vestment, ^{What a pall} ^{is.} considerable for the matter, making, and mysteries thereof. For the matter, it is made of lambs' wool and superstition. I say, of lambs' "wool, as it comes "from the sheep's back without any other artificial "colour," spun, say some, by a peculiar order of nuns, "first cast into the tomb of St. Peter^d," taken from his body say others^e, surely most sacred if from both; and (superstitiously) "adorned with little "black crosses." For the form thereof; "in breadth "not exceeding three fingers," (one of our bachelor's lamb-skin hoods in Cambridge would make three of them,) having "two labels hanging down before and "behind^f," which the archbishops only, when going to the altar, put about their necks, above their other pontifical ornaments. Three mysteries were couched therein. First, humility, which beautifies the clergy above all their costly copes. Secondly, innocency, to imitate lamb-like simplicity. And thirdly, in-

^z 1 Tim. v. 23.

^a 2 Cor. i. 8.

^b April 24, 624.

^c [Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 8. See Wharton's Angl. Sac. I. 92.]

^d H. Porter's Flowers of the Saints, p. 506.

^e Camden in Kent, p. 238.

^f Flowers of the Saints, ibid.

A.D. 618. dustry, to follow him who fetched his wandering sheep home on his shoulders^a. But to speak plainly, the mystery of mysteries in this pall was, that the archbishops receiving it shewed therein their dependence on Rome; and a mote in this manner ceremoniously taken, was a sufficient acknowledgment of their subjection. And, as it owned Rome's power, so in after-ages it increased their profit. For though now such palls were freely given to archbishops, whose places in Britain for the present were rather cumbersome than commodious, having little more than their pains for their labour, yet in after-ages the archbishop of Canterbury's pall was sold for five thousand florins^b: so that the pope might well have the golden fleece, if he could sell all his lambs-wool at that rate. Only let me add, that the author of Canterbury-book styles this pall, tanquam grande Christi sacramentum^c. It is well tanquam came in to help it, or else we should have had eight sacraments. But, leaving these husks to such palates as are pleased to feed on them, we come to the kernel of religion, how the same was propagated in other parts of England. And first, of the preparative for the purge of paganism out of the kingdom of Northumberland.

A.D. 634.
Edwin his preparatory promise to Christianity

39. Edwin, the king thereof, was monarch of all England, with the isles of Man and Anglesey, more puissant than any of his predecessors. And this saith Bede^d, was in auspicio suscipiendo fidei, "in "good handsell of the faith" he was hereafter to ^a Camden, ib. p. 237. Luke xv. 5.

^b Godwin de Preſul, p. 80. A florin is worth 4s. 6d.

^c A manuscript in Trinity Hall library in Cambridge, quoted by Whelock on Bede, p. 192.

^d Hist. Ecccl. ii. 9.

receive. God first made him great, and after A.D. 624. gracious ; that so by his power he might be the more effectual instrument of his glory. Now he had married Edelburga, daughter of \ae thelbyrt king of Kent ; to whom he not only permitted free exercise of religion to herself and her servants, but also promised himself to embrace it, if, on examination, it appeared the most holy, and fittest for divine service. In the court of this queen was one Paulinus, a pious bishop, who, with much pains and little profit, long laboured in vain to convert the pagans. God hereby both humbling him, and shewing that the hour of his mercy shall not be antedated one minute by any human endeavours. However, Paulinus, seeing he could not be happy to gain, would be careful to save ; and daily plied the word and sacraments, thereby to corroborate his own people in piety¹.

40. Now it happened that one Eomer^m, a swash- A.D. 626. His condition per- buckler, (a contemner of his own life, and thereby master of another man's,) sent from Cuichelm, king of the West-Saxons, with an envenomed dagger sought to kill king Edwin : when Lilla, one of his guard, foreseeing the blow, and interposing himself, shielded his sovereign with his own body, yea, deaded the stroke with his own death. Loyalty's martyr ; in a case which is likely to find mo to commend than imitate it, on the like occasion. Edwin, notwithstanding slightly hurt, was very sensible of the deliverance, and promised, that if he might conquer the treacherous West-Saxon king, with his adherents, he would become a Christianⁿ. And though

¹ [See Malmsbury, *De Ges-
tis Regum*, f. 9.]

^m [Saxon Chron. a. 626.

Flor. Wigorn. a. 627. Will.
Malmsb. f. 6.]

ⁿ [Malmsbury states this

A. D. 626. there be no indenting, and conditional capitulating with God, (who is to be taken on any terms,) yet this in a pagan was a good step to heaven, and Paulinus was glad he had got him thus far; especially, when in earnest of the sincerity of his resolution, he consigned over his infant daughter Fanfled to be baptized, whom Paulinus christened, with twelve mo of the queen's family*. Well, the West-Saxon king was quickly overcome, and all his complices either killed or conquered, and yet king Edwin demurred to embrace Christianity. But he communicated with the sagest of his council, with whom he had daily debates, being loath rashly to rush on a matter of such moment. And truly, that religion which is rather suddenly parched up than seasonably ripened, doth commonly ungive afterwards. Yea, he would sit long alone, making company to himself, and silently arguing the case in his own heart, being partly convinced in his judgment of the goodness of the Christian religion; and yet he durst not entertain truth, a lawful king, for fear to displease custom, a cruel tyrant.

A. D. 627. The speech of Cneth the priest. 41. Amongst the many debates he had with his council about altering his religion, two passages must not be forgotten; whereof one was the speech deed in its true colours. —

 " Quichelnum sane non me-
 " diocris culpa respergit quod
 " Edwinum Northanhumber-
 " rum regem probate pruden-
 " tie virum, subornato sicario,
 " insidias appetiverit. Sed si
 " consideretur illa gentilis sen-
 " tentia, dolor an' tortus quis
 " in honte requirat, facile ex-
 " cusabitur nihil preter soli-

" tum fecisse, quod vellicente-
 " rem potentiar quoquo modo
 " voluerit de medio subtrahere.
 " re. Nam et antea de regno
 " West-Saxonum plurima de-
 " corporata, et tunc accepta ir-
 " ritatus injuria, quicquam re-
 " cruduerant odia, multa pro-
 " vincialiibus infixit dopen-
 " dia. Will. Malmesb. f. 6; }
 " Bede, ibidem.

of Coifi, the prime pagan priest. “Surely,” said he, A.D. 627.
 “these gods whom we worship are not of any power
 “or efficacy in themselves; for none hath served “them more conscientiously than myself, yet other “men, less meriting of them, have received mo
 “and greater favours from their hand, and prosper “better in all things they undertake. Now if these “were gods of any activity, they would have been “more beneficial to me, who have been so observant
 “of them.” Here the reader will smile at Coifi his solecism, wherein the premises are guilty of pride, as the inference thereon of error and mistake.
 If he turn Christian on these terms, he will be taught a new lesson: how not only all outward things happen alike to good and bad, to him that sacrificeth, as to him that sacrificeth not^p; but also, that judgment beginneth at the house of God^q, and the best men meet with the worst success in temporal matters. However, God was pleased to sanc-tify this man’s error, as introductory to his conversion: and let none wonder, if the first glimmering of grace in pagans be scarce a degree above blindness.

42. Better, in my opinion, was the plain compa- The cour-rison, which another nameless courtier made at the tier’s comparison.
 rison, which another nameless courtier made at the same time. “Man’s life,” said he, “O king, is like unto a little sparrow, which, whilst your majesty is feasting by the fire in your parlour with your royal retinue, flies in at one window and out at another. Indeed we see it that short time it remaineth in the house, and then is it well sheltered from wind and weather; but presently it passeth from cold to ^o Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 13. ^p Eccles. ix. 2. ^q 1 Pet. iv. 17.

A.D. 617. " cold, and whence it came, and whither it goes, we are altogether ignorant. Thus we can give some account of our soul, during its abode in the body, whilst housed and harboured therein; but where it was before, and how it fareth after, is to us altogether unknown. If therefore Paulinus his preaching will certainly inform us herein, he deserveth, in my opinion, to be entertained."

A.D. 617. 43. Long looked for comes at last. King Edwin, ^{Edwin con-}verted, and almost three years a candidate at large of Christianity, cordially embraceth the same, and with many of his nobles, and multitudes of his subjects, is solemnly baptized by Paulinus, in the little church of St. Peter's in York¹, hastily set up by the king for that purpose, and afterward by him changed into a firmer and fairer fabrie. Thus, as those children which are backward of their tongues, when attaining to speech, pronounce their words the more plainly and distinctively: so Edwin, long, yea tedious, before his turning to Christianity, more effectually at last embraced the same. And when it was put to the question, what person most proper to destroy the heathen altars? Coifi the chief priest tendered his service, as fittest for the purpose, solemnly to demolish what he had before so superstitiously adored. Down go all the pagan altars and images at God-mundingham (now Godmundham, a small village in the East-Riding of Yorkshire²), and those idols with their hands were so far from defending themselves, that their mock-mouths could not afford one word to beweep their final destruction.

¹ Bede, ibid.

Wigorn a. 618.)

² Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 14
(Saxon Chron. a. 617. Flor. 577.)

³ Camden's Britannia. (p.

44. When thou art converted, strengthen thy bren, A.D. 627. was the personal precept given to Peter^v, but The East-ought generally to be the practice of all good men ; verted to as here it was of king Edwin, restless, until he had ty. also persuaded Eorpwald, king of the East-Angles, to embrace the Christian faith^w. Indeed Redwald, Eorpwald's father, had formerly at Canterbury, to ingratiate himself with king Ethelbert, professed Christianity ; but, returning home, he revolted to paganism at the instance of his wife^x. So great is the power of the weaker sex, even in matters of religion. For, as Bertha and Edelburga, the queens of Ethelbert and Edwin, occasioned and expedited the conversion of their husbands' kingdoms : so here a female instrument obstructed that holy design. Yea, Redwald afterwards, in the same church, set up a Samaritan mongrel religiōy, having altare et arulam^z, a communion-table and an idolatrous altar in the same temple : You cannot be partakers, saith the apostle, of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils^a ; that is, you cannot lawfully, consonably, comfortably ; but, de facto it may be done, was done by Redwald in this his miscellaneous religion.

45. But three years after^b, the conversion of the A.D. 630. East-Angles was more effectually advanced by king Seabyrh, brother, and after the death of Eorpwald, king Se- his successor in the kingdom. This Seabyrh had byrh. lived an exile in France, and got the benefit of learning by his banishment ; for, wanting accommo-

^v Luke xxii. 32.

^w [Eorpwald was baptized in the year 632. See Saxon. Chron. and Florent. Wigorn. in an. 632.]

^x Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 15.

^y 2 Kings xvii. 41.

^z Bede, ut prius.

^a 1 Cor. x. 20.

^b [Rather in 636, as Florence of Worcester states, correctly enough. Wharton inclines to the year 630. Ang. Sac. I. 403.]

A.D. 630. dations to appear in princely equipage, he applied himself the more close to his studies: seeing that means which would maintain a prince but like a scholar, would maintain a scholar like a prince. Yea, which was best of all, on his learning be grafted true religion: Bede giving him this character, that he became Vir per omnia Christianissimus et doctissimus: (can more be said in so few words?) and returning home, assisted by the preaching of Felix, a monk of Burgundy, Jurta nisi nominis sacramentum, saith Bede, (happy was his name, and happiness was with him.) converted his subjects to Christianity. This Felix was made the first bishop of Dunwich in Suffolk^a; a place formerly furnished with two and fifty churches^b, and hath scarce two now remaining, the rest being swallowed up by the sea. I can hardly hold myself from calling the sea sacrilegious: save that, on second thoughts, considering that element to be but a natural agent, yea, such whose motions are ordered by Divine providence, Hither shalt thou come, and no farther, I will rather reserve this epithet sacrilegious, to be bestowed on those men who willingly and wilfully demolish the places appointed for God's service^c.

^a [Hist. Eccl. ii. 15.]

^b [This see was translated from Dunwich to Elmham about the year 955; afterwards to Thetford, in 1075; and lastly to Norwich, in 1094.]

^c Weever's Funeral Monuments in Suffolk. [p 718.]

^d [At present one church only remains, dismantled of its roof and falling into ruins; but many times, at low water, the remains of the other churches may be seen. In all probability, from the encroachments of the sea, the church and the abbey, of which the walls remained but a few years back, will be soon swallowed up like the rest. Weever has published in his "Funeral Monuments" an original letter respecting the state of this town, written in the time of Queen Mary, p. 718. ed. 1631. I speak from personal observation, having frequently run-

46. This Seabyhrt is generally reputed the founder A.D. 631. of the university of Cambridge^g. And because the point in hand is somewhat litigious, we will take the more pains in clearing thereof, two things being warily premised. First, that Sedbyhrt's founding the university of Cambridge ought not by any to be extended to lessen and abate, much less to drown and destroy her more ancient title to learning, which she deriveth, according to good autho^{rs}^h, from many hundred years before. Valeant, quantum valere possint, let such her overgrown evidences stand as valid as they may, by us neither confirmed nor confuted for the present. And indeed all such old things in either university, though specious to the eye, must be closely kept and tenderly touched, lest otherwise, being roughly handled, they should moulder into dust. Secondly, let none suspect my extraction from Cambridge will betray me to partiality to my mother, who desire in this difference to be like Melchisedec, ἀγενάλογος, "without descent," only to be directed by the truth. And here I make this fair and free confession, which I hope will be accepted for ingenuous: that, as in Thamar's travail of twins, Zarah first put out his hand, and then drew it in again, whilst Pharez first came forth into the worldⁱ: so I plainly perceive Cambridge with an extended arm, time out of mind, first challenging the birth-right and priority of place for learning; but afterwards drawing it in again, she lay for many years desolate, and of less account; whilst Oxford, if later, larger, came forth in more entire proportion, and bled among these and other ruins of churches on this coast when a boy.]

^g A. D. 631. But some make it four years after.

^h See Caius De Antiq. Camb.

[Aead. p. 30. et sq.]

ⁱ Gen. xxxviii. 28.

A.D. 631. ever since constantly continued in the full dimensions of an university¹.

The leading testimony of Bede explained 47. These things being thus cautiously stated, we proceed, beginning with Bede, on whose testimony all the following history is founded.

[Sigebertus, ubi regno politus est, mox ea qua in Galliis bene disposita vidit, imitari cupiens, instituit scholam, in qua pueri literis erudirentur, jurante se episcopo Felice (quem de Cantia acceperebat) eisque pedagogos ac magistros, justa morem Cantuariorum, prebente².

" Sedbyrht, when he had obtained the kingdom, presently desiring to imitate those things which he had seen well-ordered in France, instituted a school, wherein youths might be trained up in learning. Felix the bishop (whom he had received out of Kent) assisting him, and providing for them teachers and masters, according to the custom of those in Canterbury."

See here, king Seabyrht, to make his school complete, united therein such conveniences for education as he had observed commendable.

i. Abroad, in France: where learning at, and before his time, was brought to great perfection: St. Hierome affirming, that even in his age he had seen studia Galliarum florentissima, "most flourishing universities in France!"

ii. At home, in Canterbury: where even at this time learning was professed, though more increased some forty years after; when, as the same Bede re-

¹ [This subject has been discussed usque ad nauseam. Fuller has quoted and employed the principal authorities. Since his time, the Oxford antiquary, Wood, in the commencement of his History of the University of Oxford, has considered the subject at great length, with considerable accuracy and research. See also Smith's History of University College, and Smith's edition of Bede, Appendix, No. xiv.]

² Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 19.

¹ In Epistola ad Rusticum, [Ep. iv. t. I. p. 42.]

ports^m, that in the days of Theodorus the archbishop A.D. 631. there were those that taught geometry, arithmetic, and music, (the fashionable studies of that age,) together with divinity. The perfect character of an university, where divinity the queen is waited on by her maids of honour.

But I question whether the formality of commencing was used in that age; inclining rather to the negative that such distinction of graduates was then unknown, except in St. Paul's sense, Such as used the office of a deacon well, purchased to themselves a good degreeⁿ.

48. So much for Bede's text. Come we now to ^{Authors} ancient authors commenting upon him. Ancient ^{comment-} _{Bede's text.} Ing on call those who wrote many years before the differences were started about the seniority of the universities, and therefore are presumed impartial, as unconcerned in a controversy which did not appear. First, Polydore Virgil^o, who from Bede's words plainly collects, that Seabyrht then founded the uni-

^m Hist. Eccl. i. [No such passage as this occurs in Bede's Historia Ecclesiastica; nor are there any words in Asserius such as those attributed to him at p. 194. These are certainly great oversights, for which our author received a severe check from Anthony Wood, (Antiq. of the Univ. of Oxford, I. 106.) He has met with an advocate in Dr. Smith, the editor of Bede (Append. to Bede, N^o. xiv.) Dr. Smith endeavours to defend him, and to reply to Ant. Wood's objections, by shewing that passages of similar import, though not the very words of the supposed quotations, are to be found in Bede and Asser. A very weak and untenable defence; for where so much depends upon the words of a quotation, accuracy is surely indispensable; and upon a controverted subject it is altogether unjustifiable, to substitute in support of a position our sense of an author, in the place of that author's words. It is, however, probable that Fuller quoted them at second-hand, or rusted to his memory for these passages. See Bede's Hist. Eccl. iv. 2. and v. 20.]

ⁿ 1 Tim. iii. 13.

^o [Hist. Ang. iv. p. 68. et v. p. 107.]

A.D. 631. uersity of Cambridge. Nor see I any cause for that passage in the assertion of Oxford's antiquity^r, charging Polydore, quod affectibus indulgens, adamante studet academia; who, being a foreigner and an Italian, had nothing to bias his affection to one university more than the other. Learned Leland succeeded, who, being employed by king Henry the eighth to make a collection of British antiquities, (much scattered at the dissolution of abbeys,) thus expresseth himself:

Olim Granta fuit titulis urbs inclyta multis,
Vicino a fluvii nomine nomen habens.
Saxones hanc bellum deturbavere procellis:
Sed nova, pro veteri, non praeul inde sita est
Quam Felix monachus, Sigeberti jusu sequutus, Artibus illustrem reddidit atque scholis.
Huc ego perquirens gentis monumenta Britannie,
Aserui in laudem Granta diserta tuam^s.

Grant, long ago a city of great fame,
From neighbouring river doth receive her name.
When storms of Saxon wars her overthrew,
Near to the old sprang up another new.
Monk Felix, whilst he Sigebert obeys,
Lightened this place with schools, and learning's rays
Searching the monuments of British nation,
This I assert in Grant's due commendation.

Here we omit the several testimonies of Hale^t, George Lile, and Thomas Cooper, in their several histories, anno 636, with many mo, concluding Sedbyrt then the founder of the university of Cambridge.

^r Written by Thos Caius, in Cantionem n. 3 (ed. 1544) anno 1566, p. 22 (ed. 1574) ^s In Sigeberto, Cent. i. §. 7⁹

⁹ In his Comment. in Cygne. Cent. xii. §. 5.

49. But our cousin-germans of Oxford will scarce ^{A.D. 631.} give credit hereunto, multiplying objections against it. Obj. There were, say they, many places, besides Cambridge, in the kingdom of the East-Angles, containing Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire, which, with equal probability, may pretend to this school of Sedbyrht's foundation, seeing Bede doth not nomi-natim affirm Cambridge for the particular place where this university was erected.

50. Ans. Though Bede be dumb in this particular, ^{Answer.} not naming Cambridge; yet he makes such signs, that most intelligent antiquaries by us alleged understand him to intend the same: especially seeing Cambridge is acknowledged by all authors, time out of mind, to have been a place for the education of students in literature.

51. Obj. If any such university was founded by <sup>Second objection.</sup> Seabyrht, it was at Grantchester, differing, as in appellation, so in situation from Cambridge, as being a good mile south-west thereof. Cambridge therefore cannot entitle itself, but by apparent usurpation, to the ancient privileges of Grantchester.

52. Ans. Most usual it is for ancient places to ^{Answer.} alter their names; Babylon to Bagdat, Byzantium to Constantinople, our old Verulam to St. Alban's; still retaining the numerical nature they had before. Oxford, they tell us, was once called Bellositum^s, and yet not altered from its same self by another name. Nor is it any news for great cities, in process of time (as weary of long standing) to ease themselves a little, by hitching into another place. Thus some part of modern Rome is removed more than a mile from

^s Brian Twyne, Antiq. Acad. Oxon. p. 114. retaining this name still in Beaumont-street.

A.D. 631. the ancient area thereof. Thus Jerusalem at this day is come down from mount Sion, and more southwest climbed up mount Calvary. Yet either of these places would account themselves highly injured if not reputed, for the main, the same with the former. Sufficeth it, that some part of Cambridge stands at this day where Grantchester¹ did, which anciently extended north-west² as far as the village called Howse; and that is enough to keep possession of the privileges of Grantchester, as properly belonging therunto. Especially seeing Oxford at this day lays claim to the antiquities of Cricklade and Lacelade, towns distant sixteen miles off, the one in Wilts, the other in Gloucestershire, two ancient schools of Greek and Latin, as some will have it, removed afterwards to Oxford, from whence some of her assertors do date her beginning.

Third objection.

53. Obj. Seabyrht founded but Scholam, which makes little to the honour of Cambridge; for thereby her professors are degraded to pedants, and, by a retrograde motion, Cambridge is sent back to Eton; I mean, is made no better than a great grammar school.

Answer.

54. Ans. If the best of Latin orators may be believed, schola properly signifies the place where all arts are publicly professed. Ex Platoni schola Ponticus Heraclides, “Ponticus Heraclides came out of the school of Plato;” which is notoriously known to have been an academy; yea, all his scholars

¹ Mr. Camden, an Oxford man, in his description of Cambridgeshire, alloweth Grantchester and Cambridge for the same place. Britan. p. 356.

² Carus de Antiq. Cantab. (ex libro Barnwellensis.) p. 11

³ Tully. De Natura Deorum I. 13.

known by the name of Academics to this day. A.D. 631.
Those of Salerno, in Italy, dedicating a book of physic to our Henry, (the second I take it,) begin thus ;

Anglorum Regi scribit schola tota Salerni w.

Schoolboys deserve to be whipped indeed, if presuming to prescribe receipts to a king : but that schola there is sufficiently known to have been a famous university. And, under the favour of the university, the word universitas is but a base and barbarous Latin, while schola is pure Greek originally, to design either the place where general learning is publicly professed, or the persons studying therein. And though I dare not totally concur with that learned critic^x, that universitas was first used in theforesaid sense, about the reign of king Henry the Third ; yet I believe it will not be found in any classical author in that modern acception.

55. Obj. In good authors, Seabyrh is said to have founded not only scholam, “ a school,” but scholas, “ schools,” in the plural. If schola therefore be an university, either he made mo universities than one in Cambridge, which is absurd to affirm ; or else he erected mo universities in other places of his kingdom, which Cantabrigians will not willingly confess.

56. Ans. The variation of the number is of no con-^{Answer.}cernment ; for if respect be had to the several arts there professed, Seabyrh founded schools in the plural : but if regard be taken of the cyclopædy of the learning resulting from those several sciences, he erected but one grand school. Every freshman

w [See Croke's edition, 1830, p. 39.] x Camden, in his Britannia, in Oxfordshire, p. 269.

A.D. 631. knows that the single quadrant, wherein the public lectures are read and acts kept, is called plurally the schools in each university.

Fifth objection. 57. Qd. But Bede terms them pueros, "boys," properly under the rod; and seruula, whom Sne-byrht placed in his school: and the word pedagoge, "ushers," placed over them, imports the same: that they were no university students, but a company of little lads that lived there under correction.

Answer. 58. Ans. Critics will satisfy you that the word pueri signifies even those of more maturity, especially if living sub regimine, under the discipline of superiors. Secondly, Bede, being a great divine, and conversant in scripture phrase, borroweth an expression thence: Christ calling his disciples taulic, "children." He also uses pedagogum in the same notion with St. Paul's taulayoros in Xpote, which our last translators read instructors in Christ, even to the Corinthians, who still needed such pedagogues or teachers, though already enriched in all utterance and knowledge^a. Thirdly, the Saxon ancient copy of Bede, which doubtless doth emphatically render the Latin, translates pueri geunge menn. Fourthly, Aserius Menevensis^b, speaking of Alfred's founding of Oxford, saith, that he endowed the same super proprie gentis nobilibus pueris, et etiam ignobilibus: and it is but equal that the pueri at Cambridge should be allowed as much man in them as those at Oxford. Lastly, the young fry of scholars, when first admitted, is such to whom pueri, in the proper

^a John xxii. 5.

^b 1 Cor. iv. 13.

^c 1 Cor. i. 3.

^d See note p. 189.

^e All the scholars of *Pres.
broke-hall* in Cambridge, *and being fellows, are termed pueri
in their statutes*

sense thereof, may well be applied. And here it may A.D. 631. seasonably be remembered how an Oxford antiquary affirmeth^d, that Edward the fifth prince of Wales, and Richard his brother, duke of York, Oxonie studuerunt, studied at Oxford, in the lifetime of their father. Stout students no doubt, whereof the elder could not then be ten, the younger not nine years old. But I forget what lawyers hold, that the king's eldest son is at full age, for some purposes, at the day of his birth; in which respect he may sue out his liveries for the dukedom of Cornwall: and this, perchance, may somewhat mend the matter.

59. But enough of this matter, which some will Conclusion with prayer. censure as an impertinency to our Church History, and scarcely coming within the churchyard thereof. My prayers shall be, that each university may turn all envy into generous, yea gracious, yea glorious emulation; contending by laudable means which shall surpass other in their serviceableness to God, the church, and commonwealth: that so commencing in piety, and proceeding in learning, they may agree against their two general adversaries, ignorance and profaneness. May it never be said of them, what Naomi said of herself, that she was too old to bear sons^e: may they never be superannuated into barrenness; but, like the good trees in God's garden, they shall still bring forth fruit in their old age, they shall be fat and flourishing.

60. Seasonably Seabyrh erected an university at Cambridge, thereby in part to repair the late great loss of Christianity in England, when, the year after, ^{A.D. 632.} <sup>Edwin, king of Northum-
berland,</sup> Edwin, king of Northumberland, was slain in battle ^{slain.}

^d Brian Twyne, Antiq. Oxon. p. 322.

^e Ruth i. 12.

A.D. 632. by Cedwala, king of Wales, and Penda, king of the Mercians¹. After whose death, his whole kingdom relapsed to paganism; and Paulinus, archbishop of York, taking with him queen Ethelburga, returned into Kent, and there became bishop of the then vacant church of Rochester. Mortified man, he minded not whether he went up or down hill, while he went on straight in his calling to glorify God and edify others; sensible of no disgrace, when degrading himself from a great archbishop to become a poor bishop. Such betray much pride and peevishness, who, out of eminent places, will rather be nothing in the church, than any thing less than what they have been before.

A.D. 633. 61. After the death of king Edwin, his kingdom <sup>The unhappy year.</sup> of Northumberland was divided into two parts², both petty kingdoms:

i. Bernicia, reaching from the river Tees to Edinburgh Frith, whereof Eansfrith was king³.

ii. Deira, whence, say some, Deirham or Durham, lay betwixt Tees and Humber, whereof Osric was king⁴.

These both proved apostates from the Christian faith; and God, in his justice, let in Cedwala, king

¹ Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 20. [Flor. Wigorn. et Saxon Chron. in an. 633.]

² Romanus the last bishop, who had been sent to Rome by Justus the archbishop, having been drowned in the passage. Bede, *ibid.*⁵

³ Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 1. [Flor. Wigorn. an. 634.]

⁴ Camden's Brit. p. 558.

⁵ [This was the ancient division of the kingdom of Northumberland. Authors are at variance as to the limits of Bernicia, some considering the Tees and the Tweed as its extreme limits. (See Usher, Antiq. p. 212.) As the two kingdoms were generally governed by viceroys, or merely nominal kings, their extent continually varied, as might be expected. See also The Appeal, part ii. p. 16.]

of the Britons, upon them, who slew them, harassed ^{A. D. 634.} their country, and made a lamentable desolation, within the compass of one year, without respect to age or sex; until Oswald, bred and brought up in Scotland, next of the blood royal, came to be king of Northumberland, whom God sent to redeem that miserable country from the hands of their enemies, and many eminent victories he obtained^k.

62. The fatal year wherein so many outrages were ^{A lost year well found.} committed on the apostate Northumberlanders by Cedwala, king of the Britons, is detested by all Saxon chronologers. And therefore all the annalists, and writers of histories in that age, by joint consent, universally resolved to damn and drown the memorial of that annus infaustus^l, as they call it, “unlucky year,” but made so by ungodly men. Yea, they unanimously agreed to allow those two apostate kings no years’ reign in their chronicles, adding the time subtracted from them to Oswald, their Christian successor, accounting him to have reigned nine years^m; which indeed were but eight of his own, and one of these historians their adoptionⁿ. Yet is it no news, even in scripture itself, to bury the reign of tyrants under the monument of a good prince succeeding them. Thus when Ehud is said to have judged the land fourscore years^o, those eighteen years^p are included wherein Eglon the Moabite oppressed Israel.

^k [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 3.]

^l Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 1.

^m Idem, iii. 9. [Saxon Chron. an. 634.]

ⁿ [Both William of Malmesbury and Florence of Worcester distinguish their reign from that of their successor; placing their reign in the year 633, and that of Oswald in 634. See Malmsh. De Gestis regum

f. 9. b.]

^o Judges iii. 30.

^p Ver. 14.

A.D. 635. 63. Amongst the many victories achieved by this ^{A victory given from heaven.} Oswald, one most remarkable was gained by him near Hexham in Northumberland, against the pagans, against whom he erected the standard of the cross, in a place which time out of mind was called Heafen-feld, (Haledon at this day,) by a prolepsis, not answering the name thereof until this time. Hence a poet writing the life of Oswald :

Tunc primum scivit causam cur nomen haberet
Heafen-feld, hoc est, celestis campus : et illi
Nomen ab antiquo dedit appellatio gentis
Præterita, tanquam belli præsaga futuri⁴.

Then he began the reason first to know
Of Heafen-feld, why it was called so ;
Named by the natives long since by foresight,
That in that field would hap an heavenly fight.

Thus it is generally reported, that the place nigh Leipsic, where the king of Sweden got one of his signal victories, was, time out of mind, termed by the Dutch Gots Acre, or God's ground⁵. And thus as Onesimus and Eutychus were so called from their infancy, but never truly answered their names till after the conversion of the one⁶, and reviving of the other⁷ : so places, whether casually or prophetically, have names anciently imposed upon them, which are sometimes verified many ages after.

⁴ {The quotation is little else than a metrical version of Bede. " Vocatur locus ille lingua Anglorum Heafen-feld" (that is, Heaven-field) " quod diu potest Latine, celestis campus, quod certo utique præ-sagio futurorum antiquitus non men accepit." Eccl. Hist. iii. 2.)

⁵ Swedish Intelligencer

⁶ Philem. v. 11.

⁷ Acta xv. 12

64. About this time, Honorius the pope sent his A. D. 635. letter to the Scotch nation, advising them to an uniformity with the church of Rome in the celebration of Easter^u. His main reason is thought to have more of state than strength; human haughtiness, than holy divinity in it. Namely, he counselleth them, Ne paucitatem suam in extremis terræ finibus constitutam, sapientiorem antiquis sive modernis quæ per orbem erant Christi ecclesiis aestimarent. This is that Honorius, of whom Leo the second, his successor, complaineth in his epistle to the bishops of Spain; flammam hæretici dogmatis, non, ut decuit apostolicam autoritatem, incipientem extinxit, sed negligendo confovit^w; “by his negligence he did countenance the heretical opinions (meaning of the Monothelites, then beginning afresh to spring up again,) which he ought to have suppressed.” Thus he, who could stickle about the ceremony of keeping Easter, could quietly connive at, yea interpretatively consent to the depraving of the doctrinal part of religion. But his letter to the Scotch took little effect, who kept their Easter not one minute the sooner or later for all his writing unto them.

65. In a better work, and with better success, was Birinus employed, an Italian by birth, sent over by pope Honorius for the conversion of the remainder ^{converts the} _{West-Saxons to the} _{faith.}

^u [Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 19. They held the error of the Quartodecimans already mentioned, supporting their practice by the authority of Anatolius. (See p. 171. Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 3. and Usher, Antiq. p. 482.) In the year 640, John IV. wrote to the Scots, or rather the Irish, in refutation of this their error, and for the suppression of the Pelagian heresy, which had begun to revive among them. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii. 19. The efforts of the pope were eventually successful. Bede, ib. iii. 4.]

^w Epist. Decret. vol. ii. 654. ed. Romæ 1591. [Usher, ib. p. 486.]

A. D. 635. of England; and to that purpose, that his preaching belike might be the more powerful, made a bishop before his coming over, by Asterius, bishop of Genoa¹. Here I am at a loss. Bishop of what? where was his diocese or bishopric? were not bishop and bishopric so correlated in that age, that they must be together? the trick of making titular bishops not as yet being used in Rome. It is impossible that bishop here should import no more than a plain priest; and that he only took orders before he came over into England. Well, commend me to the memory of this man, who first was made bishop, and then made himself a bishopric, by earning it out of the pagan English, whom he intended to convert to Christianity. Yea, he passed his solemn promise, in the presence of the pope, that he would preach the gospel in the heart of the uttermost coasts of England, (meaning the northern parts thereof,) whither no teacher had at any time gone before him². Minded herein like St. Paul, *not to boast in another man's line of things made ready to his hand*³.

A broken promise well kept.

66. That his promise Birinus, though he literally brake, virtually kept; for he chanced to land among the West-Saxons, then called Gevisse⁴, in the south-west part of England, where as yet the inhabitants were pure-impure pagans. Having here found a fit subject for his pains, why should he go farther to seek the same? Is not Providence the best herald to marshal us, and ought we not to sit down where

¹ Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 7.

² Idem ibid.

³ 2 Cor. x. 16.

⁴ That is, the people of the west. This country extended from Berkshire and Hampshire to the Land's end. It afterwards became the most powerful kingdom in the Saxon heptarchy;

it disposeth us? Besides, according to military rules, A. D. 635. it was best to clear the coasts as he went, and not to leave a pagan foe behind his back. Moved here-with, Birinus here sets up his staff (episcopal), fix-eth himself, falls a preaching, converts many, and, amongst the rest, Cynegils the West-Saxon king, whom he baptized. Oswald, king of Northumber-land, chanced to be present at that time, and was first godfather, then father-in-law, to king Cynegils, to whom he gave his daughter to wife^b.

67. Dorchester, not the town which denominates Dorchester Dorsetshire, but an old city in Oxfordshire, (not in ^{made a bi-}shop's ^{see.}) made the Berkshire, as Stapleton mistakes it^c, was made the seat of Birinus his bishopric. Bede saith, Donaverunt autem ambo reges eidem episcopo civitatem, quæ vocatur Dorcic, &c. “ both the kings, Oswald and Cynegils, gave to the said bishop the city Dorinca, or Dorchester.” Both of them:—hence observe, first, that Oswald, whose concurrence in this grant was required, though particular king of Northumberland, was also monarch of all England. To justify our former observation, that amongst the seven Saxon kings, always one was paramount above the rest. Secondly, that this Dorchester, though it lay north of Thame in Oxfordshire, which properly belonged to the kingdom of Mercia, pertained now to the West-Saxons, beyond the ordinary limits assigned to that kingdom.

68. In this year Honорius, archbishop of Canterbury, divided England (understand, so much thereof ^{England di-}_{vided into parishes.} as was Christian) into parishes^d. But that most ex-

^b Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 7. this assertion, as far as I can

^c In his translation of Bede, discover, is bishop Godwin, in
ib. his work De Præsul. Angliæ.

^d [The only authority for p. 40.]

A.D. 635. quisite antiquary^c seems very unwilling to admit so early and ancient parishes, in the modern proper acceptation of the word. Who knoweth not, that parochia at large signifieth the diocese of the bishop^d and two new dioceses (Dunwich and Dorchester) were erected under Honorius, in the province of Canterbury. But whether parishes, as usually understood for places bounded in regard of the profits from the people therein, payable only to a pastor incumbent there; I say, whether such parishes were extant in this age, may well be questioned, as inconsistent with the community of ecclesiastic profits, which then seemed jointly enjoyed by the bishop and his clergy.

A ~~marcine~~ ~~preacher~~
~~little editi-~~
~~ed.~~ 69. No sooner was Oswald, whom we formerly mentioned, settled in his kingdom of Northumberland, but his first princely care was to provide ~~pa-~~tors to instruct his people in Christianity^e. In order whereunto he sends into Scotland, where he had his own education, for some eminent preachers. Unusual the sun should come out of the north to enlighten the south, as here it came to pass. One preacher was sent him thence, whose name we find not, but thus much of his nature; that, being over rigid and severe, his sermons made no impression on his English auditory^f. Hard with hard, saith the proverb, makes no wall: and no wonder, if the spiritual building went on no better, wherein the austerity and harshness of the pastor met with the ignorance and sturdiness of the people. Home he returns, complaining of his ill success; and one Aidan, of a milder temper, and more discretion, a grace which none ever spake against but such as wanted A. D. 635. it,) was sent back in his room.

^c Selden's Hist. of Tithes, p. 256

^d [Bede, Hist. Eccl. m. 3.]
^e [Bede, Hist. Eccl. m. 5.]

70. Aidan coming into England, settled himself ^{Aidan his due commendation.} at Lindisfarne, or Holy-Island, in Northumberland^h; a place which is an island and no island twice in twenty-four hours, as divided by the tide from, so conjoined at low-water to the continent. His exemplary life was a pattern for all pious pastors. First, he left to the clergy *saluberrimum abstinentiae, vel continentiae exemplum*ⁱ; though we read not he vowed virginity himself, or imposed it on others. He lived as he taught; and whatsoever the bounty of princes or great persons bestowed on him, he gave to the poor. He seldom travelled but on foot; and when invited to large feasts at court, used to arise after a short refection, and betake himself to his meditations. He redeemed many slaves from captivity, making them first free-men, then Christians.

71. All these his excellent practices Bede dasheth ^{Bede his allay.} with this allay, that he had a zeal of God, although not fully according to knowledge^k; merely because he dissented from the Romish church in the celebration of Easter. But whether those words of St. Paul, spoken of his countrymen the Jews^l, in reference to their stumbling at Christ, the Saviour of mankind, be fitly applicable to Aidan, only differing in an outward ceremony, let others decide. True it is, this Aidan was a prime champion of the Quartodecimans, as who had been brought up under or with St. Colme in Ireland^m. The writer of the life of this St. Colmeⁿ (let this be inserted by the way)

^h [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 3.]

ⁱ [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 5.]

^k Hist. Eccl. iii. 3. et 17.

^l Rom. x. 2.

^m [Rather in Iona. See

Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 3.]

ⁿ [Written by Adamnanus, presbyter of Iona, who is sup-

A.D. 635. reports how the said saint had a revelation of the Holy Ghost, which prophesied unto him of this discord, which after many days should arise in the church, about the diversity of the feast of Easter. Yet he telleth us not that the Holy Ghost reprobated this Colmæn, whose example animated others against the Roman rite, for his error; as if God cared not which of both sides carried the controversy.

Laymen's diligence in reading scripture.

72. But all which Bede speaketh in diminution of Aidan may freely be forgiven him, were it but for his faithful recording of the following passage in Aidan's life; and take it with Stapleton's own translation thereof:

Omnes qui cum eo incedabant, sive attulissent, seu laici, meditari deberent; id est, aut legendis scripturis, aut psalmis discendis operam daret.

"All they which went with him, were they professed into religion, or were they lay brethren, gave themselves continually to such temptation, that is to say, bestowed all their time, either in reading scripture, or in bearing the psalter."

Bede, speaking hereof, addeth moreover, tantum rite illius a nostri temporis sequitia distabat, so much posed to have died about 704. This life has been published in several collections, among the rest by Cantius, in his Var. Lectiones, vol. I. p. 674, ed. 1725. Some account of Adamnus will be found in Bede, Hist. Eccl. v. 15.)

Archbishop Usher, in the Religion of the Irish, p. 72.

P. St. Columba or Columbanus was a native of Ireland, and founder of a monastery at Derry, in that country, whence he passed over into the northern and mountainous parts of Scotland to convert the Picts the southern inhabitants having been converted long before by Ninus, a Briton. He founded a monastery in the island Iona, or Iona, since called Colchill, that is the cave of St. Columba. He died in 597. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 4. See Chro. an. 576. He is altogether a different person from Columba, also a native of Ireland, who died in 615.)

9 (Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 5.)

differed his life from the laziness of our age : taxing A.D. 635. those of his time for neglect of the scriptures. And the ignorance bemoaned in his age continued and increased after his death.

73. When Aidan came first into England, he was ^{The royal interpreter.} not perfect in the language of our country^r; for although the speech of the modern southern Scot be only a Doric dialect of no distinct language from English, yet Aidan, who naturally spoke Irish, was not intelligible of his English congregation. Wherefore king Oswald, a better Scotchman, as bred amongst them, than Aidan was Englishman, interpreted to the people what the other preached unto them. Thus these two put together made a perfect preacher. And although some will say, sermons thus at the second-hand must lose much of their life and lustre ; yet the same spirit working in both, the ordinance proved effectual to the salvation of many souls.

74. This year the first Lent was kept in England ; ^{A.D. 640.} conceive it in those parts thereof which obeyed the ^{The first Lent in England.} Roman celebration of Easter^s : otherwise it is suspicious that the Quartadecimans were no good Quadragesimarians, and no such conscientious observers of Lent on the Romish account. Surely if people were taught in Lent to fast, as from flesh, so, from

^r [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 3.]

^s [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 7. Eadbald, king of Kent, dying this year, was succeeded by his son Ercenberht. He destroyed all the idols in his kingdom which had been left by his grandfather Æthelberht and his father Eadbald, who nevertheless had been converted to Christianity.]

He was also the first of our English kings who observed the fast of Lent. Of course he could enjoin this observance no further than in that part of the Saxon heptarchy which acknowledged his authority. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 7. Saxon. Chron. and Flor. Wigorn. an. 640.]

A. D. 640. a proud and false opinion of meriting thereby, policy would be well pleased, and piety not offended at the observing thereof; whilst continent countries might keep it without any loss to their souls, and islands with great gain to their estates.

A. D. 641. ^{The ill suc-} 75. Oswald, king of Northumberland, fighting at Maserfeld (since Oswestry) in Shropshire, against ^{cess of good} kings.

Penda the pagan prince of Mercia¹, was overthrown, slain, and his body most barbarously abused, and chopped in pieces². Yet, it is observable that such Saxon kings which were first converted to Christianity, and such who were the most active restorers of religion after a general apostasy, commonly came to violent deaths by the hands of heathens: as Edwin, first Christian king of Northumberland, slain by pagan Penda, anno 633.

Eorpwald, first Christian king of East-Angles, slain by his own people, anno 636.

Peada, first Christian king of Mercia, slain by his own wife, anno 656.

Edelwald, or Ethelwald, first Christian king of Sussex, slain likewise³.

Oswald, the most religious restorer of Christianity in Northumberland, slain anno 642.

¹ He was the first king of Mercia, of which kingdom he laid the foundation in 626, and was the most formidable of all the princes of the Saxon heptarchy, carrying terror and consternation wherever he turned his arms. He slew two kings of Northumberland, Edwin and Oswald, and three of the East-Angles, Sedyrht, Egric, and Anna, and lastly, drove into exile Kenwalch, the king of the West Saxons. Malmesb. f. 14. The same writer describes him as eager for battle as the crow whose flight towards the smell of the carcass.

² (Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 1.)

³ Slain in the year 686, by Ceadwalla. See Flor. Wigorn. a. 685.

Anna, the most pious king of the East-Angles, A. D. 642.
slain by Penda, anno 654.

Edmond, the most devout king of the East-Angles, martyred by the Danes, anno 870.

Inquiring into the causes hereof, we find, first, that the lustre of their lives shining before men, made them the fairer mark for their malicious enemies. Secondly, Satan, accounting them traitors against his kingdom of darkness, left no stone unturned, thereby to bring them to temporal destruction, the greatest hurt which his power could inflict. Thirdly, God, to try the patience of his infant church, acquainted them with afflictions from their very cradle. Such therefore are mistaken, who make prosperity a note either of piety in particular persons, or verity in a whole church; seeing, take it one time with another, and it misseth the mark oftener than it hits it. As for our Oswald, legions of miracles are attributed unto him after death; all which we willingly omit, insisting only on one as most remarkable.

76. The story goes thus^x: On an Easter-day Oswald's hand said wald was sitting in his palace at dinner with bishop Aidan; when in comes one of his servants, and informeth him that abundance of poor people from all parts sat in the streets expecting some alms for their relief. Presently king Oswald commands, not only that the meat set before him should be given them, but also that the large silver charger holding the same should be broke in pieces, and, in want perchance of present coin, parted betwixt them. Whereupon, Aidan, laying hold on Oswald's right hand, (and that alone, we know, ought to be the almoner^y,)

^x [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 6.]

^y Matt. vi. 3.

A. D. 642. "I pray God this hand," said he, "be never consumed^a;" which is said accordingly to come to pass. So that when all the other members of king Oswald's body, torn asunder by his barbarous enemies, were putrefied, his right hand always remained unconsumed.

Nullo verme perit, nulla putredine tabet
Dextra viri, nullo constringi frigore, nullo
Dissolvi fervore potest; sed semper eadem
Immutata statu persistit, mortua vivit.

No worm, no rottenness taints his right hand;
Corruption free, in vain the cold doth strive
To freeze, or heat to melt it, which doth stand Still at one stay; and, though dead, is alive.

But it is not enough for us that we have the poet's pen for it; if we also had Oswald's hand to shew for the same, much might be wrought on our belief herein.

Mystically true. 77. For my own part, I conceive that Aidan his words to Oswald, that "his hand should never wax old, or be consumed," were spiritually spoken, in a mystical meaning, parallel to those scripture expressions; The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance^b, even when the name of the wicked shall rot. The bountiful hand never consumes: neither actually, it never wastes nor impairs an estate, God so ordering it, that the more he giveth the more he hath; nor passively, "it is not consumed," the acts thereof remaining in a perpetual memorial here and hereafter. But grant this miracle of Oswald's hand literally true in the latitude there, I desire any ingenuous papist to consider the time wherein it was acted. It was Easter-day^d, yea, such an Easter-day as was celebrated by the quartadecimans, Aidan being present thereat, contrary to the time which the canons of Rome appointed. Now did not a divine finger in Oswald his miraculous hand point out this day then to be truly observed? Let the papists produce such another miracle to grace and credit their Easter Roman style, and then they say something to the purpose.

^a So Stapleton translateth what in Bede is inconferat. ^b Camden's Brit. in Lancast. (p. 46.)

^b Psal. cxii. 6.

^c Prov. x. 7.

78. It plainly appears, that the survivors had not only a charitable opinion, but a comfortable presumption, yea, an infallible persuasion, that the soul of king Oswald was possessed of heavenly happiness instantly after his death. What better demonstration of his present being in perfect bliss than those many miracles, which the papists confidently report to be done by him after his death, in curing sick people of their several maladies? For such souls which they fancy in purgatory are so far from healing others, that they cannot help themselves. Yea, Bede calleth this Oswald, jam cum Domino regnantis, "now reigning with the Lord^e." Yet the same author attesteth^f, that even in his time it was the an^d [Die Sancto Paschæ. Bede, ib. Malmesbury speaks of this arm as existing even in his day. De Gestis Regum f. 9. b. The preservation of the arm is readily accounted for. When Oswald was slain in battle, the enemy cut off his head and arms, and affixed them to a pole, leaving the body for burial. The arms were preserved in a box by his brother Oswiu at Bamborough, and the head buried by him at Lindisfarne. Malmesb. ib.]

^e Hist. Eccl. iii. 12.

^f Hist. Eccl. iii. 2.

A. D. 642. anniversary custom of the monks of Hexam to repair to Heafen-feld, (a place hard by, where Oswald, as aforesaid, obtained his miraculous victory,) and there "to observe vigils for the salvation of his soul," plurimaque psalmorum laude celebrata, rictimam pro me mane sacrar oblationis offerre. A mongrel action, betwixt good-will and will-worship: though the eyes of their souls in those prayers looked not forward to the future, petitioning for Oswald's happiness: but backward to what was past, gratulatory to the blessings he had received. Purgatory therefore cannot properly be founded on such suffrages for the dead. However, such over officiousness (though at first it was like the herb in the pot, which doth neither good nor ill) in after ages became like that wild gourd^a, poisoning men's souls with superstition, when they fell to downright praying for the departed.

A. D. 644. The death of Paulinus. 79. This year Paulinus, late archbishop of York, since bishop of Rochester, ended his life^b; and one Ithamar succeeded him, born in Kent, and the first Englishman bishop, all being foreigners before him^c. As he was the first of his nation, I believe him the second of his name, meeting with no more save only Ithamar, the youngest son of Aaron, high-priest of Israel.

^a 2 Kings iv. 42.

^b [Bede, Hist. Eccl. m. 14.]

^c (The reason of foreigners being preferred seems to have been the want of learning in the native Saxons for so important a dignity. So Bede seems to indicate in his commendation of Ithamar, "In

"eius (sc. Paulini) locum

"Honorus archiepiscopus posce-

"davit Ithamar, originam

"quidam de gente Cantuarior-

"rum, sed vita et eruditio-

"antecessoribus sua equan-

"dum" Hist. Eccl. m. 14.)

"Exod. vi. 23.

80. After king Oswald his death, four Christian ^{A.D. 645.} Most Christian king Oswiu. contemporary kings flourished in England^k. First, Oswiu, king of Northumberland, more commendable for the managing than the gaining of his kingdom^l; except any will say, that no good keeping can make amends for the ill getting of a crown, seeing he defeated Ethelwald, Oswald's son, and the true heir thereof. Bede termeth him regem Christianissimum^m, "the most Christian king;" a style wherewith the present majesty of France will not be offended, as which many years after was settled on his ancestors. Long had this Oswiu endeavoured in vain by presents to purchase peace from Penda, the pagan king of Mercia, who miserably harassed his country, and refused any gifts, though never so rich and great, which were tendered unto him. At last, saith my authorⁿ, Oswiu resolved, We will offer our presents to such a king who is higher in command and humbler in his courtesy, as who will not disdain to accept them. Whereupon he devoted his daughter to God, in her perpetual virginity, and soon after obtained a memorable conquest over his enemies, and cleared the country from his cruelty.

^k [Bede, Hist. iii. 16. If Fuller restricts the number to four, the statement is incorrect: for Ercomberct, king of Kent, who is celebrated for his piety by all our early chroniclers, was still living.]

^l [Oswiu succeeded his brother Oswald in the kingdom of Northumberland in the year 642. In the year 645 Oswini succeeded to the kingdom of Durham, by right of his father Osric. He, though related to Oswiu, was slain by him in the year 651, and was succeeded in that kingdom by Æthelwald the son of Oswald. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 14. Flor. Wigorn. and the Saxon Chron. in the years 642. 645. 651. Seabyrht king of Essex, and Penda prince of the Middel-angli, were converted by the means of Oswiu. See Flor. Wigorn. in an. 653.]

^m Hist. Eccl. iii. 21.

ⁿ Idem, [iii. 24. Flor. Wigorn. a. 655.]

A. D. 654.

Seabyrht
the toogood.

81. Secondly, Seabyrht, king of Essex, and the restorer of religion in his kingdom, (which formerly had apostatized after the departure of Mellitus), valiant and pious, though taxed for his contumacious company-keeping, contrary to his confessor's command, with an excommunicated count, in whose house he was afterward murdered by two villains: who, being demanded the cause of their cruelty, why they killed so harmless and innocent a prince, had nothing to say for themselves, but they did it because "his goodness had done the kingdom hurt; " "such his proneness to pardon offenders on their, " though but seeming, submission, that his meekness "made many malefactors." But I hope, and believe, that the heirs of Seabyrht, though the story be silent herein, finding his fault, amended it in themselves, and exercised just severity in the execution of these two damnable traitors.

A. D. 654.
Anna happy in an holy issue.

82. Anna may be accounted the third successor to Seabyrht, and happy in a numerous and holy offspring^a. Yea, all his children, save Firminus the eldest, slain with his father in a fight against pagan Penda, were either mitred or veiled when living, sainted and shrined when dead: as Erkenwald, bishop of London; Etheldrith, or Audrey, and Sexburga, successively foundresses and abbesses of Ely; Withgith, a nun therein; and Ethilburg, abbess of Barking, nigh London.

A. D. 656.
The conqueror.

83. Peada, prince of Mercia, may make up the

^a Bede, Hist. Eccl. m. 22;

^b Bede, Hist. Eccl. m. 22.

^c Bede, Hist. Eccl. m. 18.

Flor. Wigorn. a. 654.

^d At first victory of the Middle-angli under his father

Penda. Bede, Hist. Eccl. m. 21.

Flor. Wigorn. a. 653. After

Penda was slain in battle by

Osman, in the year 653, the kingdom of Mercia fell into his hands, but he gave the quaternion, who married Alchfleda, daughter of A.D. 656. Oswiu, king of Northumberland; and thereupon renouncing paganism, embraced Christianity, and propagated it in his dominions. Indeed Penda, his father, that persecutor of piety, was still alive, and survived two years after, persisting an heathen till death, but mollified to permit a toleration of Christianity in his subjects. Yea, Penda, in his old age, used an expression, which might have beseemed the mouth of a better man, namely, “that he hated not Christians, but only such who professed Christ’s “ faith without his works^s;” accounting them contemptible who pretended to believe in God without obeying him.

84. A brace of brethren, both bishops, both eminent for learning and religion, now appeared in the church; so like in name, they are oft mistaken in authors one for another. Now, though it be “ pleasant for brethren to live together in unity;” yet it is not fit by error they should be jumbled together in confusion. Observe their difference therefore.

St. Cedd, in Latin Ced-dus, I believe the elder, born at London^t, where afterward he was bishop;

St. Chad, in Latin Ceadda, born in Northumberland, bred likewise in Holy Island, and scholar to Aidanus. He was bishop of Lichfield; a mild and modest man, of kingdom of South Mercia to Peada, who was murdered by his wife the next year. Three years after the death of Peada, the nobles of Mercia, who had secretly preserved Wulfhere, the son of Peada, rebelled against Oswiu. They were successful, and the kingdom of Mercia reverted again to the family of Penda. Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 24. Flor. Wigorn. a. 655. 659.]

^s Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 21.

^t [H. Porter’s Flowers of the Saints, p. 35.]

^v Idem, p. 224.

A. D. 656. bred in Holy Island, an active promoter in making the East-Saxons converts, or rather reverts, to the faith. He is remembered in the Romish Kalendar, January the seventh.

whom more berauster. His death is celebrated in the Kalendar March the second, and the dust of his tomb is by papists reported to cure all diseases, alike, in man and beast. I believe it might make the dumb to see, and the lame to speak.*

The later of these was, as the longest liver, so the most eminent in his life; who made many Christians, and amongst the rest Wulfade and Rufine, sons to Wulfsphere king of Mercia, succeeding Peada therein, who was suddenly slain, and his untimely death was a great loss to religion.

*Fridona first English
archbishop.* 85. Look we now on the see of Canterbury, where (to our comfort) we have gotten one of our own countrymen into the place, Fridona, a Saxon. Yet, for the more state of the business, he assumed the name of Deus-dedit. We know archbishops of his see are termed alterius orbis papæ, and such changing of names was fashionable with the popes. He was consecrated by Ithamar alone, bishop of Rochester, the first English bishop consecrating the first English archbishop. Let no sophister cavil with his threadbare maxim, Nihil dat quod non habet, and

* [St. Cedd, the elder brother, who was a monk in Holy Island, was at first a preacher among the Middle-angli, shortly after the conversion of king Peada by Finan, the successor of Aidan. Afterwards he was sent by king Oswiu to the East Saxons, and was consecrated one of their first bishops by Finan. He founded the monastery of Lastingaeu, near

Whitby, in Yorkshire; the headship of which he left at his death to his brother St. Chad, more correctly Ceddæd, first bishop of York, and afterwards of Litchfield. He appears to have been the youngest of the four brothers, Cedd, Cynibill, Cælin, and Cædda. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 22. 23. Symeon, Hist. Eccl. Dunelm. chap. iv.]

therefore a single bishop could not confer archiepi- A.D. 656.scopal power, but leave it to the canon lawyers to decide what may be done in case of extremity. Meantime how causeless is the caption of the papists^x at the consecration of Matthew Parker, because no archbishop, though four bishops, was present thereat. Seeing, though an archbishop be requisite ad dignitatem, bishops will suffice ad honestatem; and a single bishop, as Ithamar heret^y, may be effectual ad essentiam of an archiepiscopal consecration. No wonder therefore if Evagrius was acknowledged a legitimate bishop by the pope himself^z, though contrary to the rigour of the canon, consecrated by Paulinus alone^a. Deus-dedit answered his name, (a good archbishop is God's gift,) and for nine years and more ruled the church to his great commendation.

86. A barbarous murder was committed by Wulfhere, king of Mercia, who, understanding that his two sons, Wulfade and Rufine, had embraced Christianity, cruelly slew them with his own hands^b. A.D. 662.
Wulfhere's murder of his two sons. But

^x Sanders de Schism. [Angl. p. 279. ed. 1628.]

^y Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 20.

^z Binnius, in notis in epist.

17. Innocentii I. [Concil. tom. ii. 1268. ed. Labbe et Coss.]

^a Theodoret. [Hist. Eccl. v.

23. ed. Reading.]

^b [Bede, the Saxon Chronicle, and Florence of Worcester, observe a deep silence upon this point. The former indeed gives a direct testimony of Wulfhere being a Christian at the time of his accession. For, speaking of the emancipation of that kingdom from the yoke of Oswiu, who held it by the right of conquest, he observes;

“ Sicque cum suo rege liberi,

“ Christo vero regi pro sempi-

“ terno in cœlis regno servire

“ gaudebant.” Hist. Eccl. iii.

24. Ingulph styles the sons of Peada, “ Christianæ religionis

“ cultores devotissimos:” which he would scarcely have done

had Wulfhere been an idolater. Hist. Croyland. p. 1. ed.

Gale. Malmesbury also states, that upon his very accession,

Wulfhere used his utmost exertions (enixissime juvit) to promote Christianity, which his

A.D. 661. afterwards, repenting of so foul a fact, he himself turned Christian; and in testimony thereof, finished the fair fabric of the monastery at Peterborough, begun by Peada his brother. The whole story thereof was, till lately, set forth in painting and poetry, such as it was, in the glass windows round about the cloisters of Peterborough.

Wulfade prayed Chad, that ghostly leech,
The faith of Christ him for to teach.

The making of glass brought first into England.

87. And now, having fallen on the mention of glass, be it seasonably remembered, that just at this time one Benault, a foreign bishop, but of what place I find not, brought the mystery of making glass into England, to the great beautifying of our churches and houses; the eyes being the grace of the body, as windows are of buildings. I conceive his invention was white glass alone, more ancient than painted glass in this island, as plain song is much senior to all descanting and running of division^c.

Scottish bishops dissent from 88. The paroxysm continued and increased betwixt the Scottish bishops (headed, after Aidan's death, by brother had introduced. Dicitur Gestis Regum, f. 14. Fuller follows a legend published by Dugdale in his Monasticon, vol. ii. p. 110, ed. 1661.

A very full account of the building of this monastery will be found in the Sax. Chron. in the years 653-656, though the passage bears all the marks of being an interpolation^d.

^c The use of glass windows was introduced into England by Abbot Benedict about the year 670, who built the monasteries of St. Peter and Paul at Yarrow, in the barbaricum of Durham. He also first introduced into England artificers of stone buildings. "Neque enim ante Benedictum lapidarii tabulatus domus in Britannia nisi perraro valde tur, neque perspicuitate rite penetrata lucem adibea valeris jacet; radius." Malmsb. f. 11. His life has been written by his pupil Bede.

Finan, bishop of Holy-Island,) and such who celebrated Easter after the Roman rite^d. The latter so bitterly detested the former, that they would not receive consecration of them, or imposition of hands; as if their very fingers' ends were infected with schism, for dissenting from Rome. Yea, they would neither give the sacrament of the eucharist to them, nor receive it from them: and yet they never quarrelled at or questioned the validity of baptism conferred by them, seeing bishop Finan christened the king of the East-Saxons^e, and all his subjects. Somewhat more moderate were the Scots or Quar-tadecimans in their carriage to the other, seeing St. Chad (Scottized in his judgment) refused not consecration from Wina, bishop of Winchester, though one of the contrary opinion^f.

89. Nor was this controversy confined to cloisters and colleges, but derived itself from the king's court down into private families. Thus Oswiu king of Northumberland was of the Scottish persuasion, whilst his queen and eldest son were of the Romish opinion, in celebration of Easter. One board would not hold them whom one bed did contain. It fell out so sometimes, that the husband's Palm-Sunday was the wife's Easter-day; and in other families the wife fasted and kept Lent still, whilst her husband feasted and observed Easter. Say not that wife deserved to fast always who in so indifferent a ceremony would not conform to her husband's judgment.

^d [Bede, Hist. iii. 25. Sy- meon, Hist. Eccl. Dunelm. ch.
iv.]

^e [Seabyrht.]

^f [He was consecrated by Wina and two British bishops, who observed the Scottish rite of Easter. But certainly St. Ceadda, so far from leaning to their customs, held the very opposite. See the concluding passage in Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 28.]

A. D. 662. For consciences in such kinds are to be led, not drawn. Great was the disturbance in every great family; only the poor gained by the difference, causing a duplicate of festivals, two Easters being kept every year in the same house.

A. D. 664. ^{A council is called to compose this controversy.} 90. To compose this controversy (if possible), a council was called at Streoneshalh, now Whitby in Yorkshire, by the procurement of St. Hilda, abbess therein. Here appeared, amongst many others,

For the Romish Easter.

Wilfrith, an abbot, a zealous champion^a.

Romanus, a priest, very hot in the quarrel, and others.

Moderators.

Hilda, the abbess of Streoneshalh.

St. Cedd, bishop of London, propounding to the Scottish, but not thoroughly persuaded.

For the Scottish Easter.

St. Colman, bishop of Holy Island, who succeeded Finan in that place.

But Baromius and Binnius will in no case allow this for a council, (though elsewhere extending that name to meaner meetings,) only they call it a collation; because, forsooth, it wanted some council-formalities; all bishops not being solemnly summoned, but only some volunteers appearing therein. Besides, as there was something too little, so something too much for a canonical council; Hilda, a woman, being moderatress therein, which seemed irregular^b.

^a [Heddu, vit. Wilfrid. ch. 2.] ^b [It is clear that Oswiu, king of Northumberland, and

91. In this council or collation, call it which you A. D. 664. please, after much arguing pro and con, Wilfrith at Wilfrith last knocked all down with this argument; that the Romish celebration of Easter was founded on the practice of St. Peter, prince of the apostles, and porter of heaven. King Oswiu hearing this was affrighted, who had rather anger all the other eleven apostles than offend St. Peter, one so high in power and place; for fear, as he said, lest coming to heaven-gate, St. Peter should deny him a cast of his office, and refuse to let him into happiness. St. Colman, being on the other side, was angry that so slight an argument had made so deep an impression on the king's credulity. And, to manifest his distaste, after the council was broken up, carried all those of his not St. Hilda, was moderator in this synod. In which office he seems to have had the assistance of his son Alchfrith, who being a disciple of Wilfrith, followed the Romish persuasion. The defenders of the Scotch, that is, the Irish custom of observing Easter, were Colman and his disciples, whom he in all probability brought from Lindisfarn for that purpose. Those who favoured it were Hilda and Cedd, who had been ordained by the Scotch, who acted as interpreter for both parties. The defenders of the Romish custom were Ægilberct, bishop of the West-Saxons, Agatho, a priest, and Wilfrith, abbot of Rippon, who had been educated at Lyons, where the Romish custom was observed, and who had also made a pilgrimage to Rome, where he had been instructed in the Romish custom of celebrating Easter. Heddi V. Wilfridi, ch. v. (in Gale's Script. i. p. 53.) These were supported by Jacobus, who had been a deacon to Paulinus, archbishop of York, and Romanus a priest, whom Eanfled had brought with her out of Kent. Besides these was one Ronan a Scotchman, but educated in France and Italy, a very strenuous advocate for the Romish observance, in which he had shewn much opposition to Finan, bishop of Lindisfarn, the predecessor of St. Colman. Fuller appears to have confounded him with Romanus. Wilfrith in his reply enters into a long and clear statement of the difference between the churches. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 25. Another point of dispute also was the mode of tonsure. Upon which see Dr. Smith's App. to Bede.]

A.D. 664. own opinion home with him into Scotland^a. One Tuda succeeded him in his bishopric of Holy Island, the first of that see that conformed himself in this controversy to the Romish church, and died in the same year of the plague^b.

His intended, but disappointed preferment.

92. As for Wilfrith, he was well rewarded for his pains in this council, being presently promoted to be bishop of York^c, which, since Paulinus his death, was no longer an archbishop's, but a plain bishop's see^d. But, though appointed for the place by king Oswiu, he refused consecration from any English bishops, being all irregular, as consecrated by the schismatical Scots; only Wina, late bishop of Winchester, now of London, was ordained canonically, but lately he had contracted just shame for his simony^e, in buying his bishopric^f. Over goes Wilfrith therefore to Rome for consecration, and stays there so long, that in his absence the king put St. Chad into the bishopric of York^g. The writer of Wilfrith's life complains loudly hereof:

Audacter sponsam vivo rapuere manu
Boldly in the husband's life,
Away from him they took his wife.

But, by the poet's leave, York was but espoused, not ^a [That is, Ireland, at this time the great school of ecclesiastics. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. i. 27.]

^b [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 26 Symeon, ib. ch. v.]

^c [Vacated by the death of Tuda.]

^d [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 28.]

^e [Will of Malmesb. f. 134.]

^f [Egilberet, bishop of Winchester, the predecessor of Wina, who has been mentioned in a previous note as favourable to the Romish custom of celebrating Easter, had now returned into France, his native country, and been made bishop of Paris. He assisted at Wilfrith's ordination. Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 28. Godwin de Pre-sul, p. 203.]

^g [Hedda, ib. ch. xii.]

married to Wilfrith, whilst he was in England: and A. D. 664. after his going over beyond sea, he stayed so long, that his church presumed him dead, and herself a maid-widow, which lawfully might receive another husband. At last Wilfrith returning home had York restored unto him^q, and St. Chad was removed to the new-founded bishopric of Lichfield^r.

93. The abbess Hilda, whom we mentioned before, ^{Abbess Hilda.} was like another Huldah, which lived in the college^s, superior to most of her sex in learning, inferior to none in religion^t. Monks ascribe it to her sanctity, that she turned many serpents in that country into stones. Plenty of which stones are found at this day about Whitby, the place of her abode, having the shape of serpents, but most headless; as the tale is truthless, relating it to her miraculous operation. Who knows not but that at Alderly in Gloucestershire there are found stones resembling cockles or periwinkles in a place far from the sea? which are esteemed by the learned the gamesome work of nature, sometimes pleased to disport itself, and pose us by propounding such riddles unto us.

94. Some impute it also to Hilda her holiness, ^{A miracle imputed to her holiness.} that wild geese, when flying over the grounds near her convent, fell down to the ground, as doing homage to the sanctity thereof. As the credit of the reporters hath converted wise men to believe the thing, so they justly remain incredulous, that it proceedeth from any miracle, but secret antipathy.

^q [But not till three years after his return, when Theodorus having been appointed archbishop of Canterbury, deposed St. Chad, and restored Wilfrid to York. Heddius, ib.]

^{xiv, xv.]}

^r [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 3.]

^s 2 Chron. xxxiv. 22.

^t [She died 17 Nov. 680. Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 23.]

A. D. 664. But as philosophers, when posed in nature, and prosecuted to render reasons of her mysteries, took sanctuary at occulta qualitas, monks in the same kind make their refuge to the shrine of some saint, attributing all they cannot answer to his or her miraculous operation. Yea sometimes such is monkish impudence, falsely to assign that to a saint (though all chronologies protest against the possibility thereof) which is the plain and pregnant effect of nature. Witness when they write, that Richard de la Wiche, bishop of Chichester, with his fervent prayers obtained that the witches or salt springs should boil out of the earth in Durtwich in Worcestershire¹; which are mentioned and described by ancient authors dead before the cradle of the said Richard de la Wiche was made.

A. D. 668. ^{Theodorus archbishop of Canterbury.} 95. Look we now on the see of Canterbury, and there after the death of the last archbishop, and four years vacancy, we find that church hath changed her Latin into Greek, I mean, dead Deusdedit, into Theodorus his successor, put in by the pope². This Theodorus was a Grecian by name and nation, fellow-citizen with St. Paul, born in Tarsus in Cilicia³; and herein like him, that *he spake with tongues more than they all*⁴, had more skill in learned languages than all his brethren, bishops of England, in that age. Yea, as children when young are permitted to play, but when of some years are sent to learn their book, so hitherto the infant church of England may be said to have lost time for matter of learning, and now Theodorus set it first to school, brought books to it, and it to books; erecting a well-furnished A. D. 673. library, and teaching his clergy how to make use thereof.

¹ As Cred a writer in Worcester, 433. ² Acts xxviii. 3. ³ C. C. x. 18. ⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁶⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁷⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁸⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁰⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹¹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹²⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹³⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁴⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁵⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁶⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁷⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁸⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ¹⁹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁰⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²¹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²²⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²³⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁴⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁵⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁶⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁷⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁸⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ²⁹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁰⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³¹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³²⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³³⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁴⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁵⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁶⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁷⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁸⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ³⁹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁰⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴¹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴²⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴³⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁴⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁵⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁶⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁷⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁸⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁴⁹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁰⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵¹⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵²⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵³⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁴⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁵⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁶⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁷⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸⁵ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸⁶ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸⁷ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸⁸ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁸⁹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁹⁰ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁹¹ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁹² 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁹³ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁹⁴ 1 Cor. xii. 10. ⁵⁹⁵

96. I could wish this Theodorus had had one His fierceness to keep Easter after the Romish rite. quality more of St. Paul; that in matters indifferent he would have been made all things to all men, that by all means he might save somey. Whereas he most rigorously pressed conformity to Rome in the observation of Easter: and to that purpose a council was called at Herud-ford^z, now Hertford, and not Hereford, as judicious and industrious bishop Godwin Sept. 24. (partial to the place whereof he himself was bishop) doth mistake it^a. Here Easter was settled after the Romish rite; and we are not sorry for the same, willing rather it should be any way ordered, than that the reader (with whom I sympathize more than grudge my own pains) should be troubled any longer with such a small-great controversy, low in its own merit, but heightened with the spleen and passion of such as prosecuted it. In this synod nine other articles were concluded of, as they follow here in order, out of Bede, as Stapleton himself hath translated them^b.

i. "That no bishop should have ought to do in another's diocese, but be contented with the charge of the people committed unto him.

ii. "That no bishop should molest, or any wise trouble such monasteries as were consecrated and ^y 1 Cor. ix. 22.

^z [Heoptropd.]

^a [De Præsul. p. 42.]

^b [See some pertinent remarks respecting this synod by Johnson, quoted in Wilkins' Concil. I. p. 62. The first article respecting Easter was as follows: "That we all in common do keep the holy feast of Easter on the Sunday after the xivth day of the moon in the month of March."]

A.D. 673. " given to God, nor violently take from them ought
" that was theirs.

iii. " That monks should not go from place to place,
" that is to say, from one monastery to another, unless
" by the leave of their own abbot, but should re-
" tine in the obedience which they promised at the " time of their conversion, and entering into religion.

iv. " That none of the clergy forsaking his own
" bishop should run up and down where he list, nor
" when he came any whither, should be received
" without letters of commendation from his diocesan.
" And, if that he be once received, and will not " return, being warned and called, both the receiver
" and he that is received shall incur the sentence of " excommunication.

v. " That such bishops and clerks as are strangers
" be content with such hospitality as is given them;
" and that it be lawful for none of them to execute
" any office of a priest without the permission of the " bishop in whose diocese they are known to be.

vi. " That whereon by the ancient decrees a synod
" and convection ought to be assembled twice a
" year, yet because divers inconveniences do happen
" among us, it hath seemed good to us all that it " should be assembled once a year, the first day of " August, at the place called Clafeshooch.

vii. " That no bishop should ambitiously prefer " himself before another, but should all acknowledge
" the time and order of their consecration.

viii. " That the number of bishops should be in" creased, the number of Christian folk waxing daily
" greater; but hereof at this time we said no further.

ix. " That no man commit adultery nor fornication,
" that no man forsake his own wife, but for only for“nication, as the holy gospel teacheth. And if any A.D. 673.

 “man put away his wife being lawfully married unto “him, if he will be a right Christian man, let him be “joined to none other; but let him so continue still “sole, or else be reconciled again to his own wife^c.”

I wonder no mention herein of settling the tonsure of priests (a controversy running parallel with that of Easter) according to the Roman rite^d. To conclude, let not the reader expect the like exemplification of all articles in following synods so largely as here we have presented them. For this synod Stapleton calls “the first of the English nation^e,” (understand him, whose canons are completely extant,) and therefore more patrimony is due to the heir and eldest son than to the younger brethren, who shall be content to be confined to their pensions, I mean, to have their articles not exemplified, but epitomized hereafter.

97. Theodorus archbishop of Canterbury, beheld A.D. 678.
 Wilfrith bishop of York, (one of great parts, and ^{He enviedth} Wilfrith greater passions,) with envious eyes; and therefore, ^{bishop of} York.
 to abate his power, he endeavoured that the diocese

^c [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 5.]

^d [This is not so surprising: for it is probable that Theodorus, who was educated in the Greek church, and previous to his coming into England had followed the Oriental mode of tonsure, which prevailed also in the British churches, was not favourable to the Romanists on this point. Hadrian accompanied him by the express command of pope Vitellianus: “ne quid ille contrarium veritati fidei, Græcorum more,

“in ecclesiam cui præcesset, introduceret. Qui [Theodorus] subdiaconus ordinatus, “quatuor expectavit menses, “donec illi coma cresceret quo “in coronam tonderi posset.” Corona denotes the Romish mode of tonsure, which was an imitation of the crown of thorns platted about our Saviour's head. For an account of this controversy, see Dr. Smith's App. to Bede, §. ix.]

^e In his translation of Bede, ibid.

A.D. 678. of York might be divided¹. Wilfrith offended hereat goes over to Rome to impede the project, and by the way is tossed with a grievous tempest. It is an ill wind which bloweth no man profit. He is cast on the shore of Friezeland in Belgia, where the inhabitants, as yet pagans, were by his preaching converted to Christianity. This may be observed in this Wilfrith, his τάπερα were better than his ἔργα, his casual and occasional were better than his intentional performances, which shews plainly that Providence acted more vigorously in him than his own prudence: I mean, when at ease in wealth, at home, he busied himself in toys and trifles of ceremonious controversies; but when (as now and afterwards) a

¹ [Bede, Hist. Eccl. v. 19. Heddius, ib. ch. xxvi. Bede attributes the banishment of Wilfrith to Ecgfrith, king of Northumbria (Hist. Eccl. iv. 12, 13, and v. 19, 20). It appears that contrary to the wishes of the king, he not only countenanced the mistaken piety of Etheldrith, who abandoned her husband for the cloister, but even encouraged her in it, contrary to the express wishes of the king. See also Flor. Wigorn. a. 672 and 677, and the Sax. Chron. a. 678. With these also Heddius Stephanus, Wilfrid's biographer, to a certain extent agrees, although he attributes Ecgfrith's hostility to a different cause. According to his statement, Irminburga, Ecgfrith's queen, excited feelings of envy in her husband's breast against Wilfrith, pointing his attention to that prelate's power and magnificence.]

and they induced Theodore, corrupted as Balam was by Belach, to pronounce sentence against him, and deprive him of his bishopric. Vit. Wilfrith. ch. xxiv. Malmesb. de gestis Pontif. iii. f. 149. Wilfrith's own account of the matter will be found in his petition to the pope, printed in Heddius ib. ch. xxix. together with the proceedings of the synod upon the occasion.

It is not unlikely that Godwin, who is Fuller's authority for this assertion, has mistaken Winfrid bishop of Letchfield, for Wilfrith bishop of York. Godwin, de Præsul. 653. Theodore, archbishop of Canterbury, dispossessed the former of his bishopric, on occasion of some contention between them in the year 675. Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 6. Flor. Wigorn. a. 675.

stranger, and little better than an exile, he effect- A.D. 679.
ually promoted the honour and glory of God^g.

98. And as it is observed of nightingales, that ^{The South-} ^{Saxons (as}
^{they sing the sweetest when furthest from their formerly}
^{the Frieze-} ^{nests, so this Wilfrith was most diligent in God's landers)} service when at the greatest distance from his own ^{converted} by Wilfrith.
home. For though returning into England he returned not unto York, but stayed in the pagan kingdom of the South-Saxons, who also, by God's blessing on his endeavours, were persuaded to embrace the Christian faith^h.

99. These South-Saxons, of all the seven king- ^{The first,} doms, were the last which submitted themselves to ^{the last.} the perfect freedom of God's service, and yet their country was in situation next to Kent, where the gospel was first planted. Herein it was verified, many that are first shall be last, and the last first.
Yea, the Spirit, which bloweth where it listeth, observeth no visible rules of motion; but sometimes taking no notice of those in the middle, reacheth to them which are farthest off. Indeed, Ædilwalch their king was a little before christened by the persuasion of Wulfhere, king of Mercia, who was his godfather, and at his baptizing gave him for a gift the Isle of Wight, et provinciam Meanuarorumⁱ in gente

^g [He left Frisia for Rome; and after pleading his cause there returned into England. Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 13. Flor. Wigorn. an. 679. Upon his arrival he presented the pope's decree in his favour to king Ecgfrith, who notwithstanding refused to obey it. See Hedi- dius, ib. ch. xxxiii. The extravagancies of this writer form a striking contrast to the judicious narrative of Bede, who has given a connected sketch of this prelate's life in his Hist. Eccl. v. 20.]

^h [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 13, and v. 19.]

ⁱ [The record of this province still remains in the names of Meanborough, Eastmean, Westmean, and other places in Hampshire. See Camden's Brit. p. 123. (ed. Gibson.)]

A.D. 679. occidentalium Sarorum), but his country still remained in paganism. And although Dicul a Sera, with some six of his brethren, had a small monastery at Bosham in Sussex, yet they, rather enjoying themselves than meddling with others, were more careful of their own safety than their neighbours' conversion. And indeed the pagans neither needed their life nor minded their doctrine.

Pagan obstinacy punished with famine.

100. However, these South-Saxons paid for their stubbornness, in standing out so long against the gospel; for they always were a miserable people¹, and at this present afflicted with a great famine, caused by three years' drought; so that forty men in a row, holding hand in hand, used to throw themselves into the sea to avoid the misery of a lingering death. In this woful condition did Wilfrith bishop of York, find them when he first preached the gospel unto them; and on that very day wherein he baptized them, (as if God from heaven had poured water into the font,) he obtained store of rain, which procured great plenty. Observe (though I am not so ill-natured as to wrangle with all miracles) an apish imitation of Elijah; (who carried the key of heaven at his girdle, to lock or unlock it by his prayer;) only Elijah gave rain after three years and six months, Wilfrith after bare three years; it being good manners to come a little short of his betters.

South-Saxons first taught to fish.

101. Also, saith my author¹, he taught the people (who till then knew not how to catch any fishes but

¹ Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 13.

² The kingdom of the South-Saxons was one of the smallest of the Saxon heptarchy, embracing in its extent the counties of Sussex and Surrey only. So little was its importance, that scarce a passing notice has been bestowed upon its history by Bede or the other chroniclers; eels) how to take all kind of fish in the sea and A.D. 679.

¹ Bede, &c.

 rivers. Strange! that thus long they should live in ignorance of so useful a trade, being, though infidels, no idiots; especially seeing men's capacities come very soon to be of age to understand their own profit: and the examples of their neighbours might have been tutors unto them. But Wilfrith afterward wanted no hearers, people flocking unto him;
 as when Christ made his auditors his guests they followed after him, because they ate of the loaves and were filled. The priests Eappa, Padda, Burghelm, and Oiddi, assisted in baptizing the common people;
 and king *Æ*Edilwalch gave Wilfrith a piece of land, containing eighty-seven families, at Selsey, where he erected a bishop's see, since translated to Chichester.

102. Amongst other good deeds, Wilfrith freed <sup>A double good deed.</sup> two hundred and fifty men and maid servants, both out of soul slavery, and bodily bondage¹. For, having baptized them, he procured their liberty of their masters, which they (no doubt) cheerfully embraced, according to St. Paul's counsel, Art thou called a servant? care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather^m. And thus by God's blessing, in the space of eighty and two years, (from five hundred ninety-seven to six hundred seventy-nine,) was the whole Saxon heptarchy converted to Christianity, and did never again relapse to paganism.

103. Mention being lately made of Wulfhereⁿ, the Godfathers Mercian king, his being godfather unto *Æ*Edilwalch, <sup>used to men of mature age.</sup> king of the South-Saxons, some will much admire, that one arrived at years of maturity, able to render an account of his faith, should have a godfather,

¹ [Bede, Hist. Eccl. ib.]

^m 1 Cor. vii. 21.

ⁿ Parag. 99.

A.D. 679. which (with swaddling-clouts) they conceive belong to infants alone. Yet this was very fashionable in that age: not only for the greater state, in kings, princes, and public persons, but, in maiorem cunctam, even amongst private people. For such subscriptiones were thought to put an obligation on the credite, and by reflexion on the consciences, of new Christians, (whereof too many in those days were baptiz'd out of civil designs,) to walk worthy of their profession, were it but to save their friends' reputation, who had undertaken for their sincerity therein.

A.D. 685. Cadwallader, the last king of Wales, wearied out with war, famine, and pestilence, left his own land, and, with some small treasure, fled to Alan, king of Little Britain. But princes are welcome in foreign parts, when pleasure, not need, brings them thither; or whilst they are so considerable in themselves as to command their own entertainment. Whereas this distressed king his company was beheld not only as useless and expensive, but dangerous, as likely to draw with it the displeasure of the Saxon kings, his enemies, on his entertainer. But it seems Cadwallader had better friends in heaven than any he found on earth, if it be true what confidently is reported, that an angel appeared unto him, advising him to go to Rome, there to take on him the habit of a monk, and spend the remainder of his life¹. Here he purchased lands, all by the foresaid angelical direction, built an house, (after his death converted into an hospital,) and by his will so ordered it, that certain priests of his own country should for ever have the rule and government

Cadwallader founds
a Welsh hospital at Rome.

¹ Lewis Owen his Running Register, p. 17 (ed. 1636.)

thereof. These were to entertain all Welsh pilgrims A.D. 685. with meat, drink, and lodging for the space of a month, and to give them a certain sum of money for a viaticum at their departure towards their charges in returning to their own country^P.

105. Many a year did this hospital flourish in good plenty, till the middle of queen Elizabeth her reign; when fair the revenues belonging, and few the Welsh pilgrims repairing thereto. This made father Parsons, with the rest of our English Jesuits, cast an envious eye thereon, who would never be quiet until they had obtained of pope Gregory the XIIIth to eject the old British, and unite this hospital to the English college at Rome. This, no doubt, stirred up the Welsh blood of Dr. Morris, Dr. Lewis, Dr. Smith, Mr. Griffith, who in vain stickled to the utmost of their power to continue this foundation to their countrymen. In my poor opinion, seeing an angel is said to direct in the founding and endowing of this hospital, it was but fit that either the same angel appearing again, or some other of an higher, or at least equal dignity

P [This foolish tale of Cadwallader or Ceadwalla going to Rome, depends wholly on the authority of Geoffry of Monmouth, arising doubtless from his confusing Ceadwalla, king of the West-Saxons, with Ceadwalla, king of Wales, who was killed by Oswald in the year 634. The former of these kings made a pilgrimage to Rome in the year 688, and died there. (See Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii. 12, 14, and v. 7. Sax. Chron. an. 688.) so did his successor Ina. Respecting this foolish conceit of the Welsh chronicler, in which he has been followed by some others, see R. Higden's Polychron. p. 243, (ed. Gale,) and J. Fordun, Hist. Scot. iii. 41.sq. Were not Bede's authority sufficient to decide the point, it is certain that no Welshman would ever think at that time of making a pilgrimage to Rome. This is only a foolish invention of later times to magnify the importance of the church at Rome, which the Britons at that time utterly despised. See p. 174.]

A.D. 692. and degree in the celestial hierarchy, should have altered the use, and confirmed the alienation thereto. But of this more hereafter⁹.

The ecclesiastical laws of king Ina.

106. Ina, king of the West-Saxons, about this time set forth his Saxon laws, translated into English by Mr. Lambarde. Eleven of his laws concerned church matters; kings in that age understanding their own power, the pope having not as yet intrenched on their just prerogative. These constitutions were concluded on by the king, through the persuasion of Cenred his father, Hælha and Erkenwald his bishops, and all his aldermen and wise senators of the people. Let none wonder that Ina, in his preface to these laws, termeth Erkenwald his bishop¹⁰, whose see of London was properly under the king of the East-Saxons. For he might call him his in affection, whose diocese was in another king's possession; Ina highly honouring Erkenwald for his piety, and therefore inviting him (forward of himself to all goodness) to be present at the passing of these laws. Besides, some assign Surrey as part

⁹ Vide annum Domini 1569. [Much curious information respecting this college will be found in Ant. Munday's 'English Roman Life,' which describes the author's visit to this seminary, and the manners of its scholars. This tract was first printed in the year 1590, and since reprinted in the Harleian Miscellany, II. 167, ed. 18-9.]

¹⁰ In some copies of this preamble, as in that printed by Wilkins, Conc. I. 58, the words Erkenwaldi episcopi are omitted. But whether Erkenwald was present or not, does not affect the question which is here raised. Since the days of his predecessor Cenwalla, the whole of the Cis-humber provinces were virtually, for the most part actually, under the dominion of the West-Saxon kings. According to Godwin, Erkenwald died in the year 685, three years before Ina's accession, but he quotes no authority for this statement. De Priestal. p. 173. See the note of Spelman in his Concilia, touching the chronology of this period.]

of the kingdom of the West-Saxons^s: probably at A.D. 692. this present Ina's puissance sallied over the Thames, and London might be reduced into his honorary protection. But see here a breviate of his church laws^t.

i. That ministers observe their appointed form of living.

ii. That every infant be baptized within thirty days after his birth, on the penalty of his parents forfeiting thirty shillings; and if the child chance to die before he be baptized, all his estate.

iii. If the servant doth any work on the Lord's day at the master's command, the servant shall be acquitted^u, and the master pay thirty shillings. But if he did that work without his master's command, let him be beaten, or redeem it with money, &c. A priest offending in this kind was to be double punished.

iv. The first-fruits of seeds^v were to be paid to the church on the feast of St. Martin, on the penalty of forty shillings, besides the payment of the said first-fruits twelve times over.

v. If any deserving stripes shall fly to a church, his stripes shall be forgiven him. If guilty of a capital crime, he shall enjoy his life, but make recompense according to what is right and due.

^s Usher, de Brit. Eccles. p. 394 = 210.

^t Spelman's Concilia, I. 182. [Wilkins, I. 58, and IV. 744. Brompton, in Twysden, p. 761.]

^u The Latin, liber esto, may not only import a freedom from fault, but also, that such a slave-servant should be manumitted from servitude. See the following 113th paragraph. [Neither the Latin nor the Saxon (sy he freo) admit of any other than the latter interpretation.]

^v [Cyricaseat, church-scot, church-dues. The absurd translation of the word given in the text is taken from Lombarde. See Spelman's and Twysden's Glossary, s. v.]

A.D. 692. vi. Fighters in the king's court to lose their goods and to be at the king's mercy for their life. Such as fight in the church to pay one hundred and twenty shillings. If in the house of an alderman sixty shillings, &c.

vii. Such as falsify their witness or pawn in the presence of the bishop, to pay one hundred and twenty shillings.

viii. Several penalties of money imposed on those that should kill a stranger.

ix. Such as are breakers of the peace in the town of the king or bishop^w punishable with one hundred and twenty shillings; in the town of an alderman eight shillings; in the town of one of the king's servants^x sixty shillings, &c.

x. First-fruits of all seeds were to be paid by housekeepers as due from that place wherein they themselves were resident on the day of Christ's nativity.

xi. What sums of money are to be paid by such who have killed their godfathers or godsons.

In this last law express provision is made, episcopi filius si occidatur, in case the son of a bishop be killed: a passage impertinently alleged by some for the proof of bishops married in that age: seeing neither sons natural nor conjugal, but only spiritual, at the font are thereby intended. Now let the learned in the law render the reason why murder in that age was not punishable with death, but might be bought off with money.

A.D. 694. 107. A great council (for so it is tituled) was held Women

^w [Ubi sedes ejus est.]

^x [Thayni regis.]

at Baccancelde^y by Wihtred, king of Kent, and ^{A.D. 694.} Brihtwald, archbishop of Britain, (so called therein,) ^{present at the great council of} understand him of Canterbury, wherein many things were concluded in favour of the church. Five Kentish abbesses, namely, Mildred, Ætheldrith, Æte, Wilnode, and Herelwide, were not only present, but subscribed their names and crosses to the constitutions concluded therein. And we may observe, that their subscriptions are not only placed before and above all presbyters, but also above Botred a bishop^z, (but of what diocese not specified,) present in this great council. It seems it was the courtesy of England to allow the upper hand to the weaker sex, as in their sitting, so in their subscriptions.

108. We will conclude this century with the mi-<sup>Romish brags of St.</sup> raculous holiness of Ætheldrith, or St. Audre; pro-<sup>St.
Audre's
chastity.</sup> fessing at first to be afraid to adventure on so high a subject, disheartened in reading a popish author to rant so in her commendation. “Let the fabulous “Greeks talk no more of their chaste Penelope, who “in the twenty years' absence of her husband Ulysses “lived continently, in despite of the tempting im-“portunity of many noble wooers: and let the proud

y [“Baccanceld, now called “Babchild, near to Sitting-“bourne on the Canterbury “side, being about midway “between the coast of Kent
“and London, and therefore a “very convenient place for a “Kentish council. At this “place, not many years since,
“were the visible remains of “two chapels standing very “near to one another, on the “right hand of the road from “Canterbury to Sittingbourne;

“the present church stands on “the opposite side, at no great “distance from them. Dr. Plott
“many years since observed to “me that this and other cir“cumstances were good pre-“sumptions that this was the “old Baccanceld, the place for “the Kentish councils.” Johnson's Coll. of Canons, in an.
692. Wilkins, I. 56.]

^z Spelman's Concil. I. 190.
[Wilkins, I. 56. IV. 754.]

A.D. 694. "Romans cease to brag of their fair Lucretia, that "chose rather to become the bloody instrument of "her own death, than to live after the violent
"ravishment of her honour: and let all the world
"turn their minds to admire, and their tongues and
"pens to sound the praises of the Christian virtues
"and chastity of our blessed Ethelred," &c.^a But leaving the bubbles of his rhetoric to break of themselves, on serious considerations we are so far from admiring, it is more than we can do to excuse this St. Audre, as her story is reported.

^{Twice a wife, still a maid.} 109. This Audre was daughter to Anna king of the East-Angles, and from her infancy a great afflicter of virginity^b. However, she was over-persuaded to marry one Tondberet, prince of the Fen-land^c, with whom she lived three years in the bands of unexperienced wedlock, both by mutual consent abstaining from carnal copulation. After his death, so importunate were her friends with her, that she married with Egfrith king of Northumberland.

^{Pretended chastity, real injustice.} 110. Strange, that being once free, she would again entangle herself; and stranger, that being married, she utterly refused to afford her husband what the apostle calls due benevolence^d, though he by importunate entreaties requested the same. Being benevolence, it was uncharitable to deny it; being due, it was unjust to detain it; being both, she was uncharitable and unjust in the same action. Was not this a mockage of marriage (if in that age counted a sacrament) solemnly to give herself unto her husband, whom formerly she had passed away by

^a H. Porter's Flowers of the Saints, p. 393.

^b [Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 19.]

^c Austrinum Gitternum.
^d 1 Cor. viii. 3.

a previous vow of virginity? At last she wrested A.D. 694. leave from her husband to live a nun in the monastery of Ely, which she built and endowed. After her entrance therein she ever wore woollen, and never linen about her^d: which, whether it made her more holy, or less cleanly, let others decide. Our author tells us^e, that in memory of her, our English women are wont to wear about their necks a certain chain made of fine small silk, which they call Ætheldrith's chain. I must profess myself not so well acquainted with the sex, as either to confute or confirm the truth thereof. At last she died of a swelling in her throat, and was buried in Ely.

111. Sixteen years her corpse slept in a private A.D. 695. grave near her own convent; when it came into the ^{Her miracu-} ^{culous mo-} ^{nument of marble.} head of bishop Wilfrith and her friends to bestow marble. on her a more costly burial. But alas! the soft and fenny ground of Ely Isle (where scarce a stone big enough to bury a worm under it) afforded not a tombstone for that purpose. Being thus at a loss, their want is said to be miraculously supplied^f; for under the ruined walls of Grantchester, or Cambridge^g, a coffin was found, with a cover correspondent, both of white marble, which did fit her body so exactly, as if (which one may believe was

^d Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 19.

^e Porter, in his Flowers of the Saints, p. 601. Harpsfield, [Hist. Eccl. p. 85.]

^f Beda, ib.

^g [Grantchester near Cambridge. Bede attributes this circumstance to Sexburg sister of Ætheldrith, wife of Earconberct, king of Kent, who succeeded her sister as abbess. He appears however to have taken his narrative from Wilfrith: and his words are remarkable upon this occasion:—" sicut et prefatus Wilfrid et multi alii qui novere testantur. " Sed certiori notitia medicus Cynifrid qui et morienti illi, et elevatæ de tumulo adfuit," &c.]

A.D. 696. true) it was made for it. Herein was Audre's corpse stately enshrined, and for many years superstitiously adored.

Confuted
by a credible witness.

112. But Jo. Caius, fellow of Gonvile-hall, within ten miles of Ely, at the dissolution of abbey, being reputed no great enemy to the Romish religion⁶, doth on his own knowledge report,

Quamquam illius avi caritas admirationem in eo parit, quod regnante Hen. nuper VIII, dirutum idem sepulchrum ex lapide communi fuit, non, ut Beda narrat, ex albo marmore¹. "Although the blindness of that age bred admiration there- "in, yet when the tomb was "plucked down in the reign of "king Henry the Eighth, it was "found made of common stone, "and not of white marble, as "Bede reporteth."

Thus was her tomb degraded and debased one degree, which makes the truth of all the rest to be suspected. And if all popish miracles were brought to the test, they would be found to shrink from marble to common stone, nay, from stone to dirt and untempered mortar.

A.D. 697. 113. It is needless here to insert the canons con-
The coun- cluded on at Berkhempecil at Berk- stand by Wihtred king of Kent, hempe- stand and Brihtwald archbishop of Canterbury. First, because topical, confined to that small kingdom. Secondly, hard to be understood, as depending on some Saxon law-terms, wherein conjectures are the best comment. Thirdly, such as are understood are obsolete, viz. if a master gave his servant flesh to eat on a fasting-day, his servant was on the refusal, and complaint thereof, to be made free². Some punishments therein were very absurdly proportioned, viz.

⁶ (See Strype's Parker, p. 109.) ¹ Spelman's Council. I. 1. A. &c. (Wilkins, I. 60.)

¹ In his Hist. Cantab. i. p. 8.

six shillings or a whipping was to be paid by that A.D. 697. servant who ate flesh on fasting-days; and just the same penalty was inflicted on him if convicted of offering oblations to the Devil, as if equal their offences. And be it remembered, that this council was kept cum viris quibusdam militaribus, "some soldiers being present thereat;" and yet the fifth canon therein was made to punish adultery in men of their profession.

114. As for bishop Wilfrith¹, whom lately we mentioned so active about the removal of St. Audre's corpse, he was about this time restored to his bishopric of York^m. Whereupon he fairly quitted the bishopric of Selsey, which Edilwalch, and after Ceadwalla, kings of Sussex, bestowed upon himⁿ, and returned to York. It is much this rolling stone should gather so much moss, and get wealth enough to found two monasteries; who sometimes had three bishoprics together, York, Lindisfarn, and Hagulstad^o; sometimes none at all, living many years together in exile. And indeed he continued not

1 [He was restored to his see in the second year of Aldfrith king of Northumberland, anno 686, after he had been reconciled to archbishop Theo-odore, who wrote a letter to Æthelred king of Mercia in Wilfrith's favour. Heddius, ib.
ch. xlii. Five years after this he was again driven from his seat by king Alfred and the prelates, and returning a second time to Rome was acquitted of all charges brought against him, by John V., who wrote a letter in his behalf to Æthelred and Alfred. Bede, Hist. Eccl.
v. 10.]

V. 19.]

m [In the year 686, by the favour of king Aldfrith, who had succeeded his brother Ecgfrith in the kingdom of North-umberland. He also restored to Wilfrith the monastery of Rippon, and gave him at the same time the bishopric of Hexham. In the following year St. Cuthbert died, and Wilfrith held the vacant see of Lindisfarne for a year. See Heddius, ib. ch. xlivi. Flor. Wigorn. an. 686, 687.]

ⁿ [See Heddius, ib. ch. xli.]

o [That is, Hexham in Northumberland.]

A.D. 697. long in York, but being expelled thence again, was for a time made bishop of Leicester. Nor was the king of Northumberland content with his bare expulsion, but also he would have him confess the same legal, and resign it according to the late decrees which the archbishop of Canterbury had made against him. But more hereof, God willing, in the next century.

THE EIGHTH CENTURY.

THOMÆ ADAMIDI, SENATORI LONDINENSI, MECCENATI MEO.^a

In hac tanta rerum vicissitudine, quis, qui te novit, constantiam tuam non suspicit? Undique turbatur; Tu interim tibimet ipsi tota tranquillitas, cum Deo et bonis et studiis tuis vacas.

Perlegas, queso, hanc Centuriam, vel eo nomine, quod funera tui et mei Bedæ exhibeat. Tuum dico, quia haud ita pridem sub auspiciis patronatus tui, typis Saxonice pulcherrimus prodiit; meum, quo authore (vel potius authoribus) in hoc opere toties usus sum. Pluribus viro occupatissimo molestus esse nolo. Vale.

AINFUL Wilfrith was no sooner A.D. 701. out of one trouble, but he was engaged in another. Hereupon^b Harpsfield calls him the Athanasius of that age; only, saith he, that father was persecuted by heretics, and this Wilfrith by catholics. He might have added, that Athanasius was troubled persecuted afresh by Aldfrith

Wilfrith
king of Northumberland.

* [Of this generous patron of learning and learned men, Fuller has given the following account in his History of Cambridge, p. 166. "Thomas Adams, then citizen, since lord mayor of London, deservedly commended for his Christian constancy in all conditions, founded an Arabian professorship, on condition it were frequented with competency of auditors. And notwithstanding the general jealousy that this new

"Araby, happy as all novelties at the first, would soon become desert, yet it seems it thrived so well, that the school was settled on Abraham Whelock, fellow of Clare hall." By his munificence Whelock was enabled to bring out his edition of Bede. In the dedication of this work he has paid a just compliment to Adams. Arms: Ermine, three cat-a-mountains passant guardant in pale azure.]

^b Hist. Eccles. p. 95.

A.D. 701. for essential and doctrinal truths, while Wilfrith was vexed about ceremonious and circumstantial matters. And now Aldfrith, who succeeded Ecgfrith, king of Northumberland, powerfully opposed him, being the paramount prince, and in effect monarch of the Saxon heptarchy^c. For, as we have noted before, amongst these seven kings, as amongst the planets, there was ever one sun that outshined all the rest. This Aldfrith, joining with Brihtwald, archbishop of Canterbury, called a council, and summoned Wilfrith, who appeared there accordingly^d. But being demanded whether he would obey the decrees of Theodore late archbishop of Canterbury, he wanly returned, That he was willing to obey them so far as they were consonant to the holy canons. This answer was not satisfactory to his adversaries, as having in it too little of a grant to please them, and yet not enough of a denial to give them a just offence. Then they sought by fair means to persuade him, because much trouble had arose in the church about him, voluntarily to resign under hand and seal his possessions and archbishopric; affirming, it would be a glorious act to prefer the public good before his private profit. But Wilfrith persisted loyal to his own innocence, affirming such a cession might be interpreted a confession of his guiltiness, and ap-

^c Spelman's arrangement of the chronology of this period is certainly wrong. Aldfrith succeeded his brother Ecgfrith in the year 685. (Saxon Chron. and Flor. Worcester in an 685.) In the second year of his reign Aldfrith restored Wilfrith to his see. Five years after (690) he was accused by the king himself and several of the bishops, and banished (Bede, Hist. Eccl. v. 2.) The date of this council ought therefore to have been placed in the year 691, and not in 701.

^d Malmesb. de Gestis Pont. m. 6. 151, b. Spelman's Concl. I. 20. (Wilkins, I. 6.)

pealed from that council to his holiness: and this A.D. 705. tough old man, being seventy years of age, took a journey to Rome, there to tug it out with his adversaries.

2. They accused him of contumacy, that he had contemptuously denied canonical obedience to the archbishop of Canterbury^e. He cleared himself, and complained that he had been unjustly deprived, and that two monasteries of his own founding, Rippon and Hexham, were violently detained from him. No fewer than seventy several councils^f (understand them so many several meetings of the conclave) were assembled in four months, and employed only or chiefly about deciding of this difference: belike there were intricacies therein more than are specified in authors, (knots to employ so many cunning fingers to untie them,) or else the court of Rome was well at leisure. The sentence of pope John the Seventh passed on his side, and his opposers were sent home with blame and shame, whilst Wilfrith returned with honour, managing his success with much moderation, equally commendable, that his innocence kept him from drooping in affliction, and his humility from insulting in prosperity.

3. Brihtwald, archbishop of Canterbury, humbly ^{He is at last re-} entertained the pope's letters in behalf of Wilfrith, ^{stored, and dieth in peace, an.} and welcomed his person at his return. But Aldfrith, ^{709.} king of Northumberland, refused to reseat him in his bishopric, stoutly maintaining, "that it was "against reason to communicate with a man twice

^e [Bede, Hist. Eccl. v. 19.]

^f "Septuaginta conciliabula coacta." Malmsbury, ib. f. 152.

A.D. 705. "condemned by the council of England, notwithstanding all apostolic commands in favour of him."
 But soon after he fell dangerously sick, a consequent of, and therefore caused by his former stubbornness: as those that construe all events to the advantage of the Roman see, interpret this a punishment on his obstinacy. Suppled with sickness, he confessed his fault; and so Wilfrith was restored to his place^a: whose life was like an April day, (and a day thereto is a month for variety,) often interchangeably fair and foul; and after many alterations he set fair in full lustre at last. Being forty-five years a bishop, in the seventy-sixth year of his age, he died, and was buried in his monastery at Rippon. And as he had been a great traveller when living, so his bones took one journey after his death, being translated by Odo, archbishop of Canterbury, from Rippon to Canterbury, in reparation (perchance) for those many wrongs which the predecessors of Odo had done to this Wilfrith^b. Let not therefore the papists vaunt immoderately of the unity of their church, neither let them uncharitably insult on our unhappy differences, seeing by the confession of their own authours there was digladiabile odium, "hatred (as our

^a "Contra rationem, homini
 "jam his a toto Anglorum con-
 "cilio damnato, propter quali-
 "bet Apostolica scripta com-
 "municare." Malmesbury, de Gestis Pontificum, ib. f. 152.

^b [According to Bede, (*Hist.
 Eccl.* v. 20.) he was not restored in the time of Aldfrith, but by Oared his son, who succeeded him, in the year 705. See also Flor. Wigorn., and Saxo Chron. an. 705.]

Godwin, De Presul. Angl.
 p. 654. "Illi viri quoq[ue] unet-
 "simos celebrat antiquos.
 "Theodorus, Bertualdus, Ja-
 "hannes, Rosa, nec non et
 "Hilda Abbatissa, digladiabilis
 "odio impetravit Wilfrid-
 "um Deo——acceptum
 [Malmesb. ib. f. 152.]

“may say) even to daggers drawing” betwixt Wil- A.D. 705. frith and certain principal persons, conceived signal for sanctity in that age, and sithence put into the calendar of their saints. And it is as sure, as sad a truth, that as long as corruption resides in the bosoms of the best, there will be dissensions, inflamed by malicious instruments, betwixt pious people, which otherwise agree in main matters of religion.

4. The bishopric of Sherborn was taken out of ^{Sherborn} the bishopric of Winchester^j by king Ina, and Ald-^{taken out} of Win-^{chester} helm his kinsman made first bishop thereof^k. I find no compensation given to the see of Winchester for this great canton cut out of it: as in after-ages, when Ely was taken out of Lincoln diocese, the manor of Spaldwick in Huntingdonshire was given by king Henry the First to Lincoln, in reparation of its loss, for so much of the jurisdiction taken from it. But at this time, when Sherborn was parted from Winchester, the damage to Winchester accruing thereby was not considerable; episcopal jurisdiction in that age not being beneficial, but rather burdensome. So that Winchester might turn her complaints into thankfulness, being thus eased of her cumbersome greatness. This Aldhelm, bishop of Sherborn, was the first of our English nation who

^j [This division was made at a synod held about the year 705. (See Wilkins' Concil. I. p. 70, and Wharton's Ang. Sac. II. p. 20.) Most probably in conformity to the resolutions made at the council of Heathfield in 680 (Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 17.), and the growing necessities of that large province, but slowly converted to Christianity. Daniel was appointed to the diocese of Winchester.]

^k [Bede, Hist. Eccl. v. 18. See the life of this bishop written at considerable length by Will. Malmesb. in Wharton's Angl. Sac. II. 1, and in Gale's Scriptores. I. 337. See also Malmesb. De Gestis Reg. f. 6.]

A. D. 705. wrote in Latin, and the first that taught Englishmen to make Latin verse, according to his promise¹.

Primus ego in patriam mecum, modo vita superst,
Aonio rediens deducam vertice musas.

If life me last, that I do see that native soil of mine.

From Aon top I'll first with me bring down the muses nine

He wrote many works; one of virginity², another of the celebration of Easter: and about this time the libraries of monasteries began to be replenished with books, many being written in that age.

Multitude of books created by a mistake.

5. By the way, one mistake (I could not have discerned it myself, had not a learned writer discovered it unto me) makes books of this age more numerous, and the kings therein more learned than indeed they were³. Namely, because every Latin charter granted by any king to a monastery is termed by the Saxon writers, liber or libellus, "a book."⁴ Wherefore, when they tell us of such and such books made by the Saxon kings, understand we most of them of their charters of donation. In which sense king Edgar, who some two hundred years after this time founded as many monasteries as weeks in the year, and consequently made as many charters, was a voluminous writer of no less than fifty-two books. And yet this large acceptance of books will not make up the number which Bale and Pitz pretend they have seen in this age. A

¹ Camden's Britannia in Wiltshire, (p. 177.)

² Bede, [Hist. Eccl. v. 10.]

³ Spelman's Concil. I. 210.

⁴ [The lands of the Saxons which were held by charter was called "boe-land," or "book-land;" it was from this that the word "libellus," being used for a translation of the word "book," came to signify a charter. The word "book" is frequently used in our early English writers in an extensive sense.]

vanity in them to affect a title-learning, (though a A.D. 705. stationer's apprentice after some weeks' experience might excel them therein,) and the greater, because many imaginary authors which they make as if they had seen, either were never extant, or long since extinguished.

6. But the multitude of books increaseth not our ^{The numer-} marvel so much as the numerosity of saints, such ^{osity of} as ^{noble saints} they were, in this age; whereof four parts of five, ^{in this age.} according to the heraldry of such who wrote their lives, were of royal or noble extraction. It addeth to the wonder, because St. Paul saith, Not many noble are called^p: except any confine that observation of the apostle to times of persecution, whereas Christianity now in England flourished in all peace and prosperity. But, to render their noble parentage at this time the more probable, know, that under the Saxon heptarchy royalty was increased sevenfold in England, which must beget a proportionable multiplication of nobility attending them. Yet, when all is done, as the Jewish rabbins, on their bare tradition, without ground from scripture, make Ruth the daughter to Eglon king of Moab, merely to make the descent of their king David from her the more illustrious: so it is suspicious, that to advance the temporal reputation of these saints, such monks as wrote their lives causelessly clarified and refined many of their bloods into noble extraction. However, if truly pious indeed, such saints have the best nobility in the scripture sense, These were more noble, because they received the word with all readiness of mind^q.

^p 1 Cor. i. 26.

^q Acts xvii. 11.

A.D. 708. 7. Of these noble saints, St. Guthlake, a Benedictine monk, was the first Saxon that professed an eremitical life in England; to which purpose he chose a fenny place in Lincolnshire, called Crowland, that is, the raw, or crude-land¹; so raw indeed, that before him no man could digest to live therein. Yea, the devils are said to claim this place as their peculiar, and to call it "their own land."² Is any place but the prison of hell properly theirs? Yet wonder not at their presumption, pretending this spot of ground to be theirs, whose impudence durst affirm that God had given them *all the world, and the glory thereof*³. Could those infernal fiends, tortured with immaterial fire, take any pleasure, or make any ease to themselves by puddling here in puddles, and dabbling in the moist dirty marshes? However, Guthlake took the boldness to enter common with them, and erect his cell in Crowland. But if his prodigious life may be believed, ducks and mallards do not now flock thither faster in September, than herds of devils came about him; all whom he is said victoriously to have vanquished. But, whom Satan's power could not foil, his policy had almost destroyed; by persuading Guthlake to fast forty days and nights together, after the example of Moses and Elias⁴; till, finding this project destructive to nature, he was forced in his own defence to take some necessary, but very sparing refection. He died in his ¹ See Ingulphi Hist. Groy. p. 263, and in the Acta Sanctorum, vi April, t II p. 29. The life of St. Guthlake, written by Felix, a monk who lived in the middle of the same century, has been published by Mabillon in his Act. Sanct. Benedict. Sec. III.

² Porter's Flowers of the Saints, p. 348

³ Matt. iv. 8

⁴ Porter ibid. p. 347

own cell, and Pega his sister, an anchoritess, led a A.D. 708. solitary life not far from him^w.

8. Eoves also, a poor plain man, was eminent in A swinish conceit of a this age^x: a shepherd, say some; a neatherd, others; a monk. a swineherd, say the third sort, and that most probable. For whilst he lived in Worcestershire, not far from the river Avon, the Virgin Mary is said to have appeared unto him, even where (farewell all good tokens) “he found a lost sow with seven pigs “sucking upon her^y,” and to have given order that in that very place a monastery should be erected to her honour. The beastly monk who made this vision had e'en learned as far as Virgil's Aeneids, whence he fetched the platform of this pretty conceit, a place so marked being foretold fortunate to Aeneas, to found Alba (since Rome) therein.

Litereis ingens inventa sub ilicibus sus
Triginta capitum foetus enixa jacebit
Alba solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati:
Hic locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum^z.

Where under oaks on shore there shall be found
A mighty sow, all white, cast on the ground,
With thirty sucking pigs; that place is 'sign'd
To build your town, and ease your wearied mind.

Here the monk, mutatis mutandis, (but principally shrinking the number of the pigs from thirty to seven, as more mystical,) he applies the apparition to his purpose. A pretty parallel, that pagan Rome, and popish superstition, if hue-and-cry should be

^w [She afterwards went to Rome and died there. For an account of her and others, successors of Guthlak, see Ingulph Hist. Croyl. p. 5.]

^x [See Wharton's Ang. Sac. I. 470.]
^y Godwin, De Præsul. Angl. p. 448.
^z Aeneidos iii. 390.

A.D. 708. made after them, might be discovered by the same marks. This gave the first motion to the foundation of Evesham abbey, so called from Eoves aforesaid, first built in that sow-place.

The first synod for image-worship in England.

9. But the building thereof was hastened by a second, more neat and cleanly, apparition of the Virgin Mary in the same place; who is pretended to have shewed herself, with two maiden-attendants, to Egwin, bishop of Worcester, prompting him to expedite a structure therein^a. Egwin post^b presently to Rome, and makes faith of this vision to Constantine the pope; who convinced in his judgment of the truth thereof, dispatcheth his commands to

A.D. 709. Brightwald, archbishop of Canterbury, to assemble a synod at Alnecester in Worcestershire, to promote the building of an abbey in that place: which was done accordingly, and the same was bountifully endowed by Offa, and other Mercian kings, with very large revenues. And not long after, another synod, saith my author^b, was called at London, to introduce into England the doctrine of image-worship, not heard of before, and now first beginning to appear in the public practice thereof.

Binnius and Baronius called, and why.

10. Here we expected that Binnius and Baronius, two of the Romish champions, should have been both joyful at, and thankful for this London synod in favour of image-worship, a point so beneficial to the popish coffers. But behold them, contrary to our expectation, sad and sullen; insomuch as they

^a Spelman's Concil. I. 210. (Wilkins, I. 71.)

^b Magdeburgenses Centur. VIII. § 9. p. 536⁶ ed. Basil. Sed ex recentioribus

authoribus. Naucleo et Balao. (Cent. I. § 41.) See the remarks of Spelman, &c. They are also in Wilkins, I. 23.

cast away the credit of this synod, as of no account, A.D. 709. and disdain to accept the same. For, say they, long before, by Augustine the monk, worship of images was introduced into England. But let them shew us when and where the same was done. We deny not but that Augustine brought in with him, in a banner, the image of Christ on the cross, very lively depicted^c; but this makes nothing to the worshipping thereof. Vast the distance in their own nature betwixt the historical use and adoration of pictures; though, through human corruption, the former in after-ages hath proved introductory to the latter. Nor was it probable that Augustine would deliver doctrine point-blank against Gregory, that sent him, who most zealously inveigheth against all worshipping of images^d. Wherefore, let Binnius and Baronius make much of this London synod for image-worship, or else they must be glad to accept of later councils in England to prove the same, seeing before this time none can be produced tending thereunto.

11. Now also flourished another noble-born saint, <sup>The miracle working of St. John of Beverley.</sup> namely, John of Beverley, archbishop of York, a

^c See our second book, Cent. vi. parag. 10. [p. 141.]

^d In his epistle ad Serenum Massiliensem, [lib. vii. ep. 110. et ix. ep. 9. ed. Labbe. But not the use of images; employing the same arguments in their favour as the Romanists of later days. For though he commends Serenus for not permitting the adoration of images, he reproves him for breaking them and throwing them away; thus arguing: "Aliud est enim picturam adorare, aliud per picturæ historiam quid sit

" adorandum addiscere. Nam " quod legentibus scriptura, " hoc idiotis praestat pictura " cernentibus, quia in ipsa " etiam ignorantes vident quod " sequi debeant, in ipsa legunt " qui litteras nesciunt." Ep. ix. 9. The historical use of images was not disliked by some learned protestants in our own church; but the abuse of them rendered their removal at the Reformation a matter of necessity. The letter of Gregory is worthy both of his character and sobriety.]

A.D. 707. learned man, and who gave the education to one more learned than himself, I mean venerable Bede^a. Now, though John Baptist did none^b, yet John of Beverley is said to have done many miracles. But did not the monk Overdo, who reports in his relation, that this John of Beverley, by making the sign of the cross on a dumb youth with a scalded head, not only restored him to speech and an head of hair, but eloquent discourse and brave "curled locks" A.D. 718. Some years before his death he quitted his arch-bishopric, and retired himself to his monastery at Beverley, where he died; and which afterwards king Athelstan made (I will not call it a ~~sanctuary~~, because unhallowed with the largeness of the liberties allowed thereunto, but) a place of refuge for murderers and malefactors: so that the freed-slaves in Beverley became the seat of the scowful; and, such heinous offenders as could recover the same, did therein securely defy all legal prosecution against them.

Kings and queens turn monks and nuns

12. About this time it grew fashionable with kings and queens in England to renounce the world, and turn monks and nuns, commonly in contents of their own foundation. Surely it is not only lawful, but commendable, for men to leave the world before it leaveth them, by being crucified therunto, and using it as if they used it not^b. But let others dispute whether this properly be renouncing the world, for Christians to bury their parts and persons in a clo-

^a Bede acknowledgeth that Godwin de Presul p. 253: he received the order of priesthood from him at the conclusion of his history. (See also Bede's Hist. Eccl. v. 2-6.) ^b John x. 41. ^c Flowers of the Lives of English Saints, p. 416. ^d Gal. vi. 14.

ster, which, put forth to the bank, would turn to A. D. 718. good account for church and commonwealth. David, I dare say as holy a man as any of these, lived a king and died a king: the swaying of his sceptre did not hinder the tuning of his harp, his dignity being no impediment to his devotion. And whilst these kings turning monks pretended to go out of the world, a world of spiritual pride and superstition went into them, if, as it is too suspicious, they had an high opinion to merit heaven therebyⁱ.

13. Amongst the Saxon princes who thus renounced the world, in this and the next century, King Ina his fine and rent to the church. these nine following were the principal :

1. Cynegils, king of West-Saxons.
2. Ina, king of West-Saxons.
3. Ceolwulfus, king of Northumberland.
4. Eadberht, king of Northumberland.
5. Æthelred, king of Mercia.
6. Cenred, king of Mercia.
7. Offa, king of East-Saxons.
8. Sebbi, king of East-Saxons.
9. Seabyrht, king of East-Angles.

Of all whom king Ina was paramount for his reputed piety, who accounted himself to hold all that he had of God, his landlord in chief, paid not only a great fine, but settled a constant rent on the church, then accounted the receiver-general of the God of heaven. Great fine; for besides his benefaction to other, he bestowed on the church of Glassenbury^j two thousand six hundred forty pounds weight^k, in the

ⁱ [It was at this period that pilgrimages to Rome came into repute. Bede's Chron. p. 33.]

^j [Of which he was the founder. See Malmsb. De Gestis, f. 7.]

^k Spelman's Concil. I. 229. [Wiklin, I. 81.]

A.D. 718. utensils thereof, of massy gold and silver. So that whiles some admire at his bountie, why he gave so much; others wonder more at his wealth, how he got so much; being in that age wherein such dearth of coin, and he, though perchance the honorary monarch of England, but the effectual king of the

A.D. 726. West-Saxons. The constant rent he settled were the Peter-pences to the pope of Rome¹, to be paid out of every fire-house in England, (a small sum in the single drops, but swelling great in the general channel,) which, saith Polydore Virgil², this king Ina began in England. I say, Polydore Virgil, (and let every artificer be believed in his own art,) seeing, as he confesseth, this place was his first ferment in England, which brought him over to be the pope's publican, or collector of that contribution. Afterwards this king went to Rome, and there built a school for the English, and a church adjoining unto it, to bury their dead.

A.D. 730. Wynfrith, an Englishman, was better employed, being busied about this time to convert to Christ the provinces of Franconia and Hessa, in Germany. True it is, the English were indebted to the Dutch, from them formerly deriving their original by natural generation: and now none will censure them for incest, if the son begat his parents; and this Wynfrith, descended from the Dutch, was an active instrument of their regeneration³.

¹ Parker, Antiq. Brit. p. 87.

² Hist. Angl. p. 118. ed. 1651.

³ See the life of this saint.

who afterwards adopted the name of Boniface, published with his letters. Magister. 1780.

15. Now, although many in this age posted from A. D. 730. England to Rome, possessed with an high opinion of ^{Bede,} the holiness thereof; yet sure I am, one of the best ^{though sent for, went not to Rome.} judgment, namely, Venerable Bede, was often sent for by pope Sergius himself to come to Rome; yet, for ought we can find, never went thither: which no doubt he would not have declined, if sensible of any transcendent sanctity in that place to advantage the dwellers therein the nearer to heaven. This Bede was born in the kingdom of Northumberland, at Girwiiⁿ, now Yarrow, in the bishopric of Durham, brought up by St. Cuthbert^o, and was the profoundest scholar in his age for Latin, Greek, philosophy, history, divinity, mathematics, music, and what not? Homilies of his making were read in his lifetime in the Christian churches, a dignity afforded to him alone. We are much beholding to his Ecclesiastical History, written by him, and dedicated to Ceolwulfus, king of Northumberland. A worthy work indeed, though in some respect we could heartily wish that his faith had been less, and his charity more. Faith less, in believing and reporting so many prodigious miracles of the Saxons: except any will say, that this in him was not so much vitium hominis as seculi. Charity more, I mean to the Britons, being no friend to them, and over-partial to his own countrymen; slightly and slenderly touching British matters, only thereof to make a pedestal, the more fairly to rear and advance his Saxon history thereupon.

16. Some report that Bede never went out of his cell, but lived and died therein^p. If so, the scholars

<sup>Bede probably went out of his cell.</sup>

ⁿ Camden's Brit. p. 606. pupil of Bede's.]

^o [An oversight for abbot ^p [This is further confirmed Ceolfrid, for Cuthbert was a by Bede's own letter to Eg-

A. D. 730. of Cambridge will be very sorry, because thereby deprived of their honour, by Bede's living once in their university; whose house they still shew, betwixt St. John's college and Round-Church, or St. Sepulchre's. Surely Bede was not fixed to his cell, as the cockle to his shell, seeing no observance of his Benedictine order imposed such a penance upon him. Indeed his own words, in the end of his book, give some countenance to their conjecture of his voluntary confinement; speaking of himself, Cunctum tempus rite in ejusdem monasterii habitatione peragens. But his expression imports only his general residence therein, that he was no gadder abroad, or discontinuer from his convent, for a long time; though he might for some short space make his abode elsewhere. Thus, when of the prophetess it is said, *that she departed not from the temple*⁴; we understand it not so, as if she never went out thereof; but that for the main she spent the most of her time therein.

<sup>Bede why
surnamed
Venerable.</sup> 17. He is generally surnamed Venerable, but why, authors differ therein⁵. Some say: a dunce monk, being to make his epitaph, was nonplussed to make that daetyl, which is only of the quorum in the hexameter, and therefore at night left the verse thus gaping—

He snt in fossa Bede——— till he had consulted with his pillow to fill up the bert bishop of York, printed in Smith's Bede, p. 517.

⁴ Luke ii. 37.

⁵ [Apparently this name was not given to Bede till the ninth century. In the earlier writers he is termed Beda Presbyter.

The term venerabilis, according to some authors, was first applied to those who followed a stricter observance of monastic discipline than was usual. See Smith's dissertation in his edition of Bede, p. 507.]

hiatus. But returning in the morning, an angel (we A. D. 730. have often heard of their singing, see now of their poetry,) had filled up the chasm with venerabilis. Others, disclaiming this conceit, assign this reason; because Bede's homilies were, as aforesaid, read in all churches in his lifetime*; plain Bede was conceived too little, and St. Bede too much; because, according to popish (but not St. Paul's) principles, saint is too much flattery to be given to any whilst alive; Solon allowing none happy, and this mine author none, in this degree, holy, before their death. Wherefore venerable was found out as an expedient to accommodate the difference, luckily hitting the mark, as a title neither too high nor too low; just even to so good a man and great a scholar, whilst alive. This is observable in all those who have written the life of Bede; that whereas such Saxon saints as had not the tenth of his sanctity, nor hundredth part of his learning, are said to have wrought miracles ad lectoris nauseam; not one single miracle is reported to have been done by Bede. Whereof, under favour, I conceive this the reason: monks, who wrote the lives of many of their saints, knew little more of many of them than their bare names and times wherein they lived; which made them histo-riæ racua miraculis supplere, “to plump up the hollowness of their history with improbable miracles,” swelling the bowels of their books with empty wind, in default of sufficient solid food to fill them. Whereas Bede's life affording plenty and variety of real and effectual matter, the writer thereof (why should a rich man be a thief or liar?) had no temptation, I am sure no need, to farce his book with

* Porter's Flowers of the Saints, in the life of Bede, p. 528.

A. D. 730. fond miracles, who might rather leave than lack of material passages therein.

A. D. 734.
Bede's last blaze, and the going out of the candle of his life.

18. One of the last things he did was the translating of the Gospel of St. John into English. When death seized on him, one of his devout scholars, whom he used for his secretary or amanuensis, complained, " My beloved master, there remains yet one 'sentence unwritten.' " " Write it, then, quickly," replied Bede: and summoning all his spirits together, like the last blaze of a candle going out, he uttered it, and expired. Thus God's children are immortal, whiles their Father hath any thing for them to do on earth: and death, that beast, cannot overcome and kill them, till first they have finished their testimony: which done, like silkworms, they willingly die when their web is ended, and are comfortably entombed in their own endeavours. Nor have I aught else to observe of Bede, save only this: a foreign ambassador, some two hundred years since, coming to Durham, addressed himself first to the high and sumptuous shrine of St. Cuthbert, " If thou beest a saint, 'pray for me!'" then coming to the plain, low, and little tomb of Bede, " Because," said he, " thou art a 'saint, good Bede, pray for me!'"

⁴ Rev. xi. 7.

⁵ See the exquisite description of his death by his pupil Cuthbert, who attended him in his last moments, in Sancti Bede, p. 702, and in Simeon, Hist. Eccl. Dunelm. ch. xv. The following compliment was paid to his memory by one of the most judicious of all our early writers, whose account of Bede is written with much elegance and feeling. " Sed pulta est cum eo omnis genitorum pene notitia usque

" ad nostra tempora Ad nos nullus Anglorum, studiorum ejus annulus, nullus gratia rum ejus aequalis fuit, qui omnes moneta lucrum prosequeretur pauci quoniam quis anavit Jesus, quoniam litteris non ignobiliter iacebat, nata tota ingentem esse sanguinem silentem, et sic vivi primis libens illas castitas agnivit, confervat, et cum Ita cum semper pugnat, succederet pugnat, natus tempore in tota insula studi-

19. Now began the Saxons to be infected with an A. D. 735.
 universal viciousness, the cause whereof was ; Aethel- The general viciousness of the Saxons, how occasioned.
bald, king of Mercia, contemned marriage : and though abstinence from it in some cases may be commendable, the contempt thereof always is dangerous, yea damnable, as it proved in him ; for his unlawful lust made no difference of places or persons, castles or cloisters, common kerchief or nun's veil, all came alike to him. But, oh the legislative power which is in a great prince his example ! His subjects presumed they might not only impune, but legitime, follow his precedent ; which made the land swarm with wickedness^w.

“ orum detepuit fervor. Mag“ num ignaviae testimonium da“ bunt versus epitaphii sui, “ perdendi prorsus et tanti viri “ mausoleo indigni.

“ Presbyter hic Beda requiescit carne “ sepultus;
 “ Dona Christe animam in celis gau-“ dere per sevum :
 “ Daque illi sophiae debriari fonte, cui “ jam “ Suspiravit ovans, intento semper “ amore.”

WILL. MALMSB. f. 12.]

w [See the letter of archbishop Boniface to king Aethelbald, and another to Herefrid ; in Wilkins' Conc. I. p. 86. &c. Malmesbury has given an abbreviation of the first in his history De Gestis Reg. f. 14. b. The corruption of this country is strikingly displayed, particularly in Boniface's letter to archbishop Cuthbert, where these words occur : “ Perpaucae sunt civitates in Longobardia, vel in Francia, aut in Gallia, in quibus non sit adultera vel meretrix generis Anglorum, quod scandalum est et turpi-

“ tudo totius ecclesiæ vestræ.” (Wilkins' Conc. I. p. 93.) The writer proceeds to state that one great cause of this immorality was the interference of the laity, their taking away the monasteries and religious houses from the control of the bishops, and a general intermeddling in ecclesiastical affairs from motives of cupidity. He also subjoins another reason, which shews the state of the times ; “ aliquod levamentum turpitudinis es-
 “ set, si prohiberet synodus et principes vestri muliebribus et velatis fœminis illud iter et frequentiam, quam ad Romanam civitatem veniendo et redeundo faciunt, quia magna ex parte pereunt, paucis re-“ manentibus integris.” (See also Bonifacii Epist. liv. lxxi. lxxii. lxxiii.)

England, whilst governed by the Saxons, was at its greatest height for learning and religion in the time of Bede ; after his death, it very rapidly declined. See the extracts from the let-

A.D. 735. 20. This caused the letter of Boniface, archbishop of Mentz, (an Englishman born, and lately very eminent for converting the Germans to Christianity,) to king Ethelbald; wherein he observed the prudent method of St. Paul to the Corinthians¹. As the apostle first commended them, I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things, &c., so he began with a large encomium of king Ethelbald his charity and bountiful almsgiving. Hence seasonably he descended to his faults; shall I praise you in this? I praise you not; and soundly and roundly told him of his notorious incontinency; proving, both by scripture and reason, the heinousness of that sin, and heavy judgments of God upon it. In fine, this wrought so far on the king's good nature, that he not only reformed himself, but with Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury, called a solemn synod at Clovesho, or Clives-at-ho, for the reformation of others².

A.D. 747. 21. But where this Clovesho should be, authors make much inquiry. It is generally conceived the same with Cliff, near Gravesend, in Kent. Though a learned author³ will hardly consent thereto; and his intimations to the contrary are of no great validity. For whereas he allegeth that this Cliff is in Kent, whilst Ethelbald, who called this synod, was king of Mercia; he minded not meantime, what no doubt he knew well, that this Ethelbald is styled in ters of Alcuin in Malmesb.

f. 13⁴

¹ 1 Cor. xi. 2-22

² The Saxon Chron. and other authorities date this synod in the year 742. See Wilkins' Cane. I. 94. But the MS. of the Vicar of Ew. W. garn in Corpus Col. Oxford, places it in the year 748⁵.

³ Spelman fol. following archbp. Parker and the Fest. of sir Henry Savile, fixes it in the year 747. See his note in Wilkins' Cane. I. 94. But the MS. of the Vicar of Ew. W. garn in Corpus Col. Oxford, places it in the year 748⁶.

⁴ Camden's Brit. in Kent, p. 233. (Wilkins' Cane. I. 94.)

the letter of Boniface archbishop of Mentz unto him, A.D. 747.
inclita Anglorum imperii sceptra gubernans, “ruling the famous sceptre of the English empire.” And whereas he objecteth “the site of that place inconvenient for such an assembly;” it seems fit enough, though confessed dirty in winter, and unhealthy at all times, for the vicinity thereof to London and Canterbury, the residing places of the king and archbishop, the two persons in this synod most concerned. Nor doth the modern meanness of the place make any thing against it; it might be a gallant in that age, which is a beggar nowadays. And though we confess there be many Cliffs in the inland shires, properly belonging to Mercia; yet the addition of Ho, or Haw, speaketh the maritime posture thereof. So that Clives-ho, or Haw, seems to be a cliff near the sea, well agreeing to the situation of Cliff, in Kent aforesaid^b.

22. But the acts of this synod are more certain than the place thereof, being generally accounted ^{The chief canons of this synod.} one and thirty canons, although some small variation in their number and order, all extant at large in Malmesbury^c; and of which we take notice of these four, as of most concernment:

i. “That the priests learn, and teach^d to know “the Creed, Lord’s Prayer, and words of consecration in the mass (or eucharist) in the English “tongue^e.” It seems learning then ran low, that the

^a Extant in Spelman’s Con-
cil. p. 233. [Wilkins, I. 87.]

^b Plimmouth Haw. See Speed his Survey of London,
 the meaning of Haw. [?]
 Upon Clovesho see Gibson’s
 Index to his edition of the Saxon

Chronicle.

^c De Gestis Pont. i. f. 112.
^d “Discant, et doceant.”
 Malmesbury, ib. [See also Wilkins’ Conc. I. 94. where the acts of this synod are printed at length.]

A.D. 747. priests themselves had need to learn them; yet ignorance was not then so high, but that the people were permitted to be taught them⁵.

ii. "That the Lord's Day be honourably observed." We understand it not so, as if the sanctity of that day depended only upon ecclesiastical constitutions: or that the command thereof in scripture is so infirm, in point of right to oblige men's consciences, that it needs the title of man's power, ad corrundandum: only human authority was here cast in so overweight, for the better observation of the day. Carnal men being more affected, and affrighted with corporal penalties of man's inflicting, as nearer unto them, than with eternal punishments, which Divine justice at a distance denounceeth against them.

⁵ [The article subjoins, "Ne
" vel in ipsis intercessiobus,
" quibus pro populi delictis
" Deum exorare noseuntur, vel
" ministri sui officiis inveni-
" antur quasi muti et ignari,
" si non intelligent nec verbo-
" rum suorum sensum, nec sa-
" cramenta," &c.]

⁶ [One principal cause of learning being at so low an ebb, is to be traced to the mismanagement of monasteries: for it appears that not only the princes of the land, but the superiors also of these houses, united in treating the monks like slaves and mechanics, and employed them in servile offices. And this abuse, in obedience to the directions of archbishop Boniface, is several times reprobated in the decrees of this synod. Thus Boniface says, "De violenta quaque
" monachorum servitute ope-

" ribus et edificiis regalibus
" quo in toto mundo Christi
" norum non auditur facts non
" tantum in gente Anglorum," &c. (Wilk. I. 93.) Then in the fourth act of the synod, giving directions to the heads of religious houses, these words occur: " ita tamen ut famulorum
" suarum meminerint digne in " Domino diligere et non in " vice servorum," &c. And in the seventh, where it enjoineth
the monks to study, " nec
" sint rectores terrae tam
" avidi operationis, ut domos
" Dei desolatiae spiritualis et
" natura vilescat."

The acts of this synod deserve particular attention, in describing many of the abuses which afterwards existed in the church, and applying to them the same remedies which were afterwards used by our reformers.]

iii. “ That the sin of drunkenness be avoided, A.D. 747.
 “ especially in the clergy.” Indeed it was high time to suppress that sin, which was grown so rife, that (as Boniface, archbishop of Mentz, doth observe in his letter to Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury^g)
 the English bishops were so far from punishing it, that they were guilty of the same. Moreover, he addeth, [Ebrietas] malum speciale est nostræ gentis :
hoc nec Franci, nec Galli, nec Longobardi, nec Romanî, nec Græci faciunt ; “ Drunkenness is a special “ evil of our nation, namely, of the Saxons, of which “ country this Boniface was a native ; for neither “ Franks, nor Gauls, nor Lombards, nor Romans, nor “ Greeks, (understand him anciently, for we know
 “ the modern proverb of a merry Greek,) are guilty “ thereof.”

iv. “ That prayers be publicly made for kings and “ princes.” An excellent canon indeed, because canononical scripture, and long before made by St. Paul himself ; I exhort, therefore, that supplications be made for all men, for kings, &c.^h

This synod being finished with the royal assent,
 and all the bishops their subscriptions thereunto ;
 Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury, with wonderful celerity, returned the canons concluded therein, by Cynebryht his deacon, to Boniface, archbishop of Mentz, who was affected with great joy at the sight
 thereof.

23. At this time flourished Ecgberht, archbishop Ecgberht, archbishop of York, famous in several respects.
 of York, famous in his generation ; for, first his royal extraction, being brother to Eadberht, king of North-

^g Extant in Spelman's Concil. I. 241 ; and Wilkins, I. 93.
^h 1 Tim. ii. 1.

A.D. 737. umberland; both of them lovingly lying buried together in the porch of the church of York. For in that age the greatest princes and prelates their corpses came no nearer than the church porch, and, as I may say, only knocked at the church doors; though in after-ages the bodies of meaner persons were admitted into the church, and buried therein. Secondly, for his procuring the archiepiscopal pall to his see. For after the departure, or rather the banishment, of Paulinus from York, his successors were content with the plain title of bishop, until this Eegberht, to do something extraordinary, proportionable to his princely extraction, procured the restitution of his pall, which ipso facto readvanced his church into an archbishoprie. Thirdly, for furnishing the same with a plentiful library, highly commended by Alcuinus, in his epistle to Charles the Great³, wishing France had the like; which, though exceeding England in paper, till of late years ever came short of it in books. Fourthly, for his canons for the regulating of his province. Whereof one sort is called Eegberht his Exemptions out of Fathers⁴, and is generally good; the other entitled, Canons for the Remedy of Sin, and are fraught with abundance of abominable beastliness and superstition.

³ See Will of Malmesbury, Cap. 6.

⁴ See the extract of this letter, published in Malmesbury, Cap. 6.

⁵ At a synod at Scone, Concl. 738. Will. de Concl. 738. Exemptions, see J. B. Spelman, his Collectanea, Cap. 1, under the year 738. But this is also by Wilkes. Fuller, following Sir H. Spelman, dates these exemptions, &c. not that Spelman had any authority for so doing, but because it was his rule when the date was uncertain to take the middle year of the reign in question, and that was 738. See J. B. Spelman, above.

of Wilkes. Fuller, following Sir H. Spelman, dates these exemptions, &c. not that Spelman had any authority for so doing, but because it was his rule when the date was uncertain to take the middle year of the reign in question, and that was 738. See J. B. Spelman, above.

24. I will give the reader only a taste, or rather a A. D. 750. distaste, of these canons, by which he may guess the ^{The beastly canons of} rest. "If a layman hath carnal knowledge of a nun, Egberht." "let him do penance for two years, &c., she three. "If a child be begotten betwixt them, then four years: if they kill it, then seven years' penance^{m.}" Penance also is provided for bestiality and sodomy in the same canons. Thus, where God in scripture denounceth death, Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed^{n.}; they now changed it into penance, and in after-ages commuted that penance into money; so by degrees making the word of God of none effect by their paltry canons. See we here also how forced virginity was the mother of much uncleanness, it being applicable to them what the apostle speaketh of others: It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret^{o.} And one may justly admire how these canonists, being pretended virgins, could arrive at the knowledge of the criticisms of all obscenity; so that chaste love may lie seven and seven years in the undefiled marriage bed, and be utterly ignorant what the language of lust meaneth in such filthy canons. Yea, when such love, by the help of an interpreter, shall understand the same, it would blush for shame, were it not that red would be turned into paleness, as amazed at so horrid uncleanness.

25. Some five years after, Kenulphus, king of A. D. 755. West-Saxons, conferred large privileges on the mo- ^{The charter} of Kenulnastery of Abingdon. We will recite so much of his ^{phus to the} charter^{p.} as concerns us, because useful to shew the ^{abbot of} Abingdon.

^m See Spelman, ib. p. 282.

ⁿ Gen. ix. 6.

^o Ephes. v. 12.

^p Cited by Stanford, Les plees del Coron. B. ii. f. 111.
ed. 1576. And this charter

A. D. 755. power which kings in that age had in ecclesiastical matters.

Kenulphus, rex—per literas suas patentes, consilio et consensu episcoporum, et senatorum gentis sua, largitus fuit monasterio de Abindon in comitatu Berk, ac eidam Ruchino tunc abbatii monasterii—quandam ruris sui portionem, id est, quindecim mansias in loco, qui a ruriculis tunc nunupabatur Culnam, cum omnibus utilitatibus ad eandem pertinentibus, tam in magnis, quam in modicis rebus, in eternam hereditatem. Et, quod predictus Ruchinus, ab omni regis obstaculo, et episcopalijure in sempiternum esset quietus, ut inhabitatores ejus nullius regis aut ministrorum suorum episcopi, ut aut suorum officialium yugo inde deprimantur. Sed in cunctis rerum eventibus, et discussionibus causarum, abbatis monasterii predicti decreto subjiciantur. Ita quod, &c.

"Kenulphus, king, &c. by
"his letters patent, with the "advice and consent of the "bishops and counsellors of "his country, hath given to
"the monastery of Abingdon,
"in the county of Berks, and
"to one Ruchine, then abbot
"of the monastery, &c. a cer"tain portion of his land, that "is to say, fifteen mansions,
"in a place which then of the "inhabitants was called Cul-
"nam, with all profits to the "same belonging, as well in "great as mean matters, as an "inheritance for ever. And "that the aforesaid Ruchine,
"&c. should be for ever quiet
"from all episcopal jurisdic-
"tion, that the inhabitants
"thereof be thenceforth op"pressed with the yoke of no
"bishop, or his officials, but
"in all events of matters, and "discussions of causes, they
"be subject to the decree of
"the abbot of the aforesaid
"monastery. So that," &c.

From this charter, sir Edward Coke, the king's attorney, inferreth⁴, that king Kenulphus had ecclesiastical jurisdiction in himself, in that he had power was pleaded in Hen. vii f. 23 et 25 according to Stanford, ib. This charter is printed at length from an Inspeccimus i

Edw. III n. 4. 32. in the Ma-nasticon. I. 514 ed. 1417.

⁵ His Reports, part 5 f. 6
{ed. 1625}

to discharge and exempt this abbot from the jurisdiction of the bishop; which ecclesiastical jurisdiction was always invested in the imperial crown of England: and therefore the statute made under Henry the eighth, concerning the king's spiritual authority, "was not introductory of a new law, but declaratory only of an old."^{A.D. 755.}

26. But father Parsons, for he it is who stands under the visage of the catholic divine, in a book wrote of set purpose against master attorney in this point, will by no means allow king Kenulphus any ecclesiastical power, but by many fetches seeks to evade so pregnant a proof^{r.} The cavils of Parsons against sir Edw. Coke confuted.

Arg. 1. First he pleadeth, "that in this charter Kenulphus did not exempt the abbot from all jurisdiction spiritual of the bishop, but from some temporal interest or pretence, which perhaps the bishop of the diocese claimed over the lordship of Culnam."

Answe. Perhaps, (commend not his modesty, but thank his guiltiness for his timorous assertion,) saith he: but how doth this appear, for he bringeth no proof? and if he affirmeth it on free cost, we can confute it as cheap by denying it.

Arg. 2. Secondly, saith he, "the king exempted the abbot," ab omni episcopali jure; that is, "from all right of the bishop, and not jurisdiction."

Answe. Sharp wit, to cut so small a mote in two parts for no purpose; seeing jus and jurisdiction are often known to import the same sense.

Arg. 3. Thirdly, he objecteth "the words no way seem fitly to agree to be spoken of the bishop's

^r Catholic divine, alias Parsons, in his answer to the king's attorney, p. 95. sq. [ed. 1606.]

A.D. 755. "ecclesiastical jurisdiction, which run thus: that the abbot should be quiet from the bishop's right, and that the inhabitants from thenceforward should not be oppressed by the yoke of the bishop's officers."

Ans. Why! what incongruity, but that three words may be spoken, as they are, of ecclesiastical jurisdiction? Is the word yoke too coarse a phrase to be applied to the bishop's spiritual power, as they sometimes did manage it? I appeal to those who felt it; for no yoke is heavy to him that puts it on, but to those who bear it. Mark by the way, the word he rendereth officers, is in the charter (not officiarii, lay-Latin, but) officialis, which is church-language, and the very dialect of the court Christian, and should be translated officials, to whom bishops committed their spiritual power. But Parsons knew well how to lay his thumb on what he would not have seen.

Arg. 4. Fourthly, "Howsoever it were, it is manifestly false," saith he, "that this ecclesiastical jurisdiction of king Kenulphus was derived from his crown; it might be he had it from the pope, which is most likely."

Ans. Which is most unlikely, for no clause in the charter relates to any delegate power; and yet such a passage might easily have been inserted, yet could not justly have been omitted, if he had claimed his jurisdiction by deputation from the pope.

Arg. 5. Lastly, " (which," he saith, " seemeth to convince the whole matter, and decide the very case,) one Rethurus, abbot of Abingdon, went af-

* Harpsfield, Hist. Arg. p. 2, 3 ex Mariano Scoto.

“ terwards to Rome, to obtain confirmation of the A. D. 755.
“ privileges of his monastery from the see apo“ stolic.”

Answ. What of this? This post-fact of Rethurus argues no invalidity in Kenulphus his former grant, but rather shews the over officiousness of a pragmatical abbot, who, to ingratiate himself with the pope, craved of him what he had before. Yea, such cunning compliance of the clergy with his holiness, by degrees fixed in him a supposed ecclesiastical power paramount, which really he never had, nor rightly ever ought to have.

See here the king's power in church matters in conferring ecclesiastical privileges; and this single thread we will twist with another instance so strong, that the Jesuit's art shall be unable to break it in sunder.

27. By the constitution of Augustine, first arch- A. D. 758.
bishop of Canterbury, confirmed by the authority of ^{Bodies first} brought to Gregory the Great, bishop of Rome, it was decreed, ^{be buried in} churches.
that no corpse, either of prince or prelate, should be buried within the walls of a city, but only in the suburbs thereof; and that alone in the porch of the church, and not in the body. Now Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury, having built Christ Church therein, was desirous to adorn it with the corpses of great persons therein afterwards to be interred. In pursuance of this his design, he durst not adventure on this innovation by his own power, nor did he make his applications to the pope of Rome, as most proper to repeal that act which the see apostolic had decreed, but only addresseth himself to Eadberht, king of Kent, and from him, partim precario, partim etiam pretio. “ partly praying, partly paying for it,”

A.D. 758. saith my author¹, obtained his request. Behold here an ancient church canon recalled at the suit of an archbishop, by the authority of a king. This Cuthbert afterwards handedled Christ Church with his own corpse, whose predecessors were all buried in St Augustine's, without the walls of Canterbury. Thus began corpses to be buried in the churches which by degrees brought in much superstition, especially after degrees of inherent sanctity were erroneously fixed in the several parts thereof: the porch saying to the churchyard, the church to the porch, the chancel to the church, the east end to all, "Stand farther off, for I am holier than you." And, as if the steps to the high altar were the stairs to heaven, their souls were conceived in a nearer degree to happiness whose bodies were mounted there to be interred.

The occasion of monks their first drinking of wine
in England. 28. About this time the bill of fare of monks was bettered generally in England, and more liberty indulged in their diet. It was first occasioned some twenty years since, when Ceolwulfus, formerly king of Northumberland, but then a monk in the convent of Lindisfarm, or Holy Island, gave leave to that convent to drink ale and wine, anciently confined by Aidan, their first founder, to milk and water². Let others dispute whether Ceolwulfus thus dispensed with them by his new abbatial, or old regal power, which he so resigned, that in some cases he might resume it, especially to be king in his own convent. And indeed the cold, raw, and bleak situation of that place, with many bitter blasts from the sea, and A. D. 758. no shelter on the land, speaks itself to each inhabitant there, Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities^w. However, this local privilege, first justly indulged to the monks of Lindisfarn, was about this time extended to all the monasteries of England, whose primitive over-austerity in abstinence was turned now into a self-sufficiency that soon improved into plenty, that quickly depraved into riot, and that at last occasioned their ruin.

¹ The Sprot, in his Hist. of Canterbury. See also Chron. W. Dux Twyden and the tuarium, both cited by Abp. Parker in his Antq. Brit. p. 1773 ed. Roger. Hoved. f. 331.

29. This year^x the English have cause to write A. D. 787. with sable letters in their almanack on this sad occasion, that therein the Danes first invaded England Danes their first arrival in England. with a considerable army^y. Several reasons are assigned for their coming hither, to revenge themselves for some pretended injuries; though the true reason was, because England was richer and roomier than their own country.

30. It is admirable to consider what shoals of Denmark, formerly fruitful, is now become barren of men. people were formerly vented out of Cimbrica Chersonesus, take it in the largest extent for Denmark^z, Norway, and Sweden, who, by the terrible names of Goths, Ostro-Goths, Visi-Goths, Huns, Vandals, Danes, Normans, overran the fairest and fruitfulest parts of Christendom; whereas now, though for these last three hundred years, the Swedish wars in Germany excepted, that country hath sent forth no visible numbers of people, and yet is very thinly inha-

^w 1 Tim. v. 23.

Chron. and Flor. Wig. a. 787.]

^x [See the Saxon Chronicle in this year.]

^z Otherwise strictly, it containeth only part of Denmark, continent to Germany.

^y [They landed in England with three ships. See Sax.

A.D. 787. bited, so that one may travel some hundreds of miles therein through mere deserts, every man whom he meeteth having a Phoenix in his right hand. Yet so few the natives, that some of their garrisons are manned with foreigners, and their kings fain to entertain mercenary Dutch and Scotch to manage their wars.

Two reasons there-
of.

31. Strange that this country, formerly all on the giving, should now be only on the taking hand. Some^a impute their modern comparative barrenness to their excessive drinking; a vice belike which lately hath infected that nation, drinking themselves past goats into stocks, out of wantonness into stupidity, which, by a contracted habit, debilitatech their former fruitfulness. Others^b more truly ascribe their former fruitfulness to their promiscuous copulations with women during their paganism, which are not so numerous since Christianity hath confined them to the marriage of one wife.

The reason of barrenness.

32. If I might speak according to my own profession of a divine, soaring over second causes in nature, I should ascribe their ancient populousness to Divine operation. As the widow her oil multiplied till her debts were satisfied, and that effected for which the miracle was intended, which done, the increase thereof instantly ceased: so these northern parts flowed with crowds of people, till their inundations had paid the scores of sinful Christians, and then, the birch growing no more, when the wanton children were sufficiently whipped, the procreativeness of those nations presently stinted and abated.

^a J. Burklay in Iconium (1616) p. 176 ed. 1614. ^b G. Tail in his Chronicle of Normandy (1616)

33. The landing of these Danes in England was A.D. 787. ushered with many sad prognostics: stars were seen Bad pre-strangely falling from heaven, and sundry terrible ^{sages of the} ^{Danes' ap-} flames appeared in the skies^c. From the firing of proach.
such extraordinary beacons, all concluded some new enemy was approaching the nation. Serpents were seen in Sussex, and blood reigned in some parts of the land. Lindesfarn or Holy Island was the first that felt the fury of these pagans; but soon after no place was safe and secure from their cruelty, whereof more hereafter.

34. At this time the archbishopric of Canterbury A.D. 790. was in part removed to Lichfield, five essential <sup>The archi-episcopal</sup> <sup>pall removed to</sup> things concurring to that great alteration. ^{Lichfield.}

i. The puissance and ambition of Offa, king of Mercia, commanding in chief over England^d. He would have the brightest mitre to attend the biggest crown.

ii. The complying nature of pope Adrian; except any will call it his thankfulness to gratify king Offa, for the large gifts received from him.

iii. The easy and unactive disposition of Janbyrht, or Lambert, archbishop of Canterbury^e: unless any will term it his policy, that finding himself unable to resist, (a pope and a prince overmatch for a pre-

^c Sim. Dunelm. Hist. Eccl. ch. xx. Ranulphus Cestrensis, p. 251. ed. Gale. et alii.

^d [See Malmb. f. 15. b. He ruled over twenty-three shires. Vita Offæ, ii^{di}, p. 30. (see below, p. 274.)]

^e [This reproach is certainly not just. Janbyrht was compelled to yield to the superior force of Offa, after having employed all lawful means of resistance. See Malmsb. f. 15. b. The archbishop died in the year 790; his contest with Offa happened probably five years previously, in 785. since that is the period in which it is stated that he was deprived of part of his see. See the Saxon Chron. and Flor. Wigorn. in an. 785. Vit. Offæ, p. 21.]

A.D. 790. late,) he would not strive to keep what must be taken away from him.

iv. The commodious situation of Lichfield, almost in the navel of the land: and where should the highest candlestick stand (the metropolitan cathedral) but in the midst of the table? Whereas Kent itself was but a corner, whence it taketh its name: and Canterbury seated in the corner of that corner, a remote nook thereof.

v. The antiquity of Lichfield in Christianity, where the British church suffered a massacre from the pagans three hundred years before St. Augustine's coming to Canterbury¹; witness the name of the place, being another Helkath-hazzurim, or field of strong men, where so many worthies died for the testimony of the truth².

On these and other considerations Faldulf was made the first (and last) archbishop of Lichfield, though others make Humbert and Hightort his successors in that dignity, and six suffragans, viz. Worcester, Hereford, Leicester, Siðnæster, Helmingham, and Dunwich, subjected to his jurisdiction. Yet was not the archiepiscopal see removed, as some seem to conceive, but communicated to Lichfield; Canterbury still retaining its former dignity, and part of its province; the bishops of London, Rochester, Winchester, and Sherborne continuing still subject unto him.

A.D. 793.
St. Alban's body enshrine.

35. King Offa having settled an archiepiscopal see at Lichfield, his next design was to enshrine the corpse of St. Alban: five hundred and seven years had passed since his death and plain burial³. For as

¹ Vide supra, p. 54

² 2 Sam. ii. 16

³ Vita Offæ secundi, p. 25.

annexed to the new edition of

John Baptist, the last martyr before Christ, and St. A.D. 793. Stephen, the first martyr after him, were fairly interred by their friends and followers, without any more ado, so the corpse of St. Alban were quietly committed to the earth, and there some centuries of years peaceably reposed. But now Offa, they say, was admonished in a vision to bestow more public sepulture upon him. A star, we know, directed to the place of Christ's birth, whereas a bright beam, say the monks, discovered the place of St. Alban's burial^z. A beam suspected by some shot by him who can turn himself into an angel of light, because gaining so much by their superstition. Then was Alban's body in pompous manner taken up, enshrined, and adored by the beholders. No wonder then if the Danes now invaded the dominions of the English, seeing the English invaded the prerogative of God, diverting the worship due to him alone to the rotten relics of dead men: and henceforth the old Romans' city of Verulam lost its name under the new Saxon town of St. Alban's.

36. King Offa went to Rome, and there confirmed A.D. 794. Peter-pence, re-confirmed to Rome. and enlarged to pope Adrian the gift of Peter-pence, what Ina, king of the West-Saxons, had formerly bestowed^a. For this favour the pope granted him, that no Englishman for penance imposed should be banished out of his own country.

37. But bold beggars are the bane of the best Gift no debt. bounty, when grown so impudent, that what at first was given them for alms, in process of time they

M. Paris, [Lond. 1640. See also Malmsb. f. 15, b.] called Peter-pence, because paid on the day of St. Peter ad

^z Ibid. p. 26.

^a [It was from this time in Mat. Paris, App. p. 36.] in Vincula. Vitae Abb. S. Albani;

A.D. 794. challenge for rent. Some call this a tribute (badge of subjection) of England to the see of Rome: among whom is Polydore Virgil, once collector of those Peter-pence in England. But blame him not for magnifying his own office, who, had he owned this money (as indeed it was) given in frank almonage, had then appeared no better than a gentle beggar: whereas now he hopes to advance his employment to a nobler notion.

A.D. 795.
The royal foundation of St. Alban's abbey.

38. Offa having done all his work at Rome, namely, procured the canonization of St. Alban, the absolution of his own sins, and many murders, and visited and endowed the English college there, returned home, fell to found the monastery of St. Alban's, bestowing great lands and liberties upon it, as freeing it from the payment of Peter-pence, episcopal jurisdiction, and the like^a. This is alleged and urged by our regians, to prove the king's paramount power in ecclesiasticis: seeing none can give, save what they are formally or eminently possessed of. And whereas papists plead that Offa had fore-requested the granting of these privileges from the pope, no mention at all thereof appears in the charter^b of his foundation, here too large to insert, but that all was done by his own absolute authority. Next year Offa ended his life; buried at Bedford, on that token that the river Ouse swelling on a sudden swept his corpse clean away.

Canterbury recovered

39. Offa being dead^c, down fell the best pillar of

^a [See a similar privilege granted by Kenulphus to the monastery of Abingdon, mentioned in this History, p. 266.]

^b Amongst sir T. Cotton his manuscripts, and is exemplified in Weever's Fun. Mon. p.

90 (ed. 1631.)

^c [Offa died in 794, according to the San. Chron. and Flor Wigorn., in 796, according to Suri. Dunelm. De Gestis Regum in an.]

Lichfield church, to support the archiepiscopality A.D. 796. thereof. And now Canterbury had got Æthelheard a ^{its former} new archbishop, who had as much activity to spare ^{dignity.} as his predecessor Janbyrh is said by some to want. Wherefore he prevailed with Kenulph king of Mercia, and both of them with Leo the new pope, to restore back the archiepiscopal see to Canterbury; as in the next century was perfectly effected.

40. We will conclude this century with two eminent men (to leave at last a good relish in the memory of the reader) now flourishing therein. The ^{Learned} one Alcuinus or Albinus: it being questionable whether he were more famous for venerable Bede, who was his master, or Charles the Great, who was his scholar; whilst it is out of doubt that he is most honoured for his own learning and religion. And because Englishmen may be presumed partial in the praise of an Englishman, hear what a character a learned foreigner gives of him: Vir in divinis scriptis eruditissimus, et in sacerdotalium literarum peritia nulli suo tempore secundus; carmine excellens et prosa^d. But he got himself the greatest credit by opposing the canons of the second Nicene council, wherein the superstitious adoration of images was enjoined^e. These canons, some seven years since, were sent by Charles the Great to king Offa, to be received of the English; who notwithstanding generally distasted and rejected them, the aforesaid Alcuinus writing a learned epistle against the same. He was fetched by Charles his scholar, calling him his delicious master; where he first founded the uni-

^d J. Trithemius de Script. Ecclesiasticis, [p. 250. ed. 1601.]

^e R. Hoveden. Annal. f. 234, b.

A.D. 800. versity of Paris, and died abbot of St. Martin's in Tours.

Egbryht
the first fixed monarch
of England. 41. The other was Egbryht¹, who in this very year made himself sole monarch of England. True it is, in the Saxon heptarchy there was generally one who outpowered all the rest. But such monarchy was desultory and moveable, sometimes the West-Saxon, sometimes the Mercian, sometimes the Northumberland king ruled over the rest. But henceforward Egbryht fixed the supreme sovereignty in himself and his posterity: for though afterwards there continued some other petty kings, as Kennulph king of Mercia, &c., yet they shined but dimly, (as the moon when the sun is risen,) and in the next age were utterly extinguished. So that hereafter we shall double our files, and for the better regulating of time, next the column of the year of our Lord, add another of the reign of our English kings².

¹ King of the West-Saxons; it was not till the year 827 that he was master of the Cis-humbrian provinces, in which year also he marched beyond the Humber with the purpose of making himself master of all England; but the North-umbrians having met him with offers of subjection, he returned without further efforts. See the Saxon Chron. and Flor. Wigorn. an. 827.]

² [In this edition the two series of dates are printed in the same column.]

THE NINTH CENTURY.

TO MR. WILLIAM, AND MR. ROBERT CHRISTMAS, MERCHANTS OF LONDON.

You are both brethren by birth, and by your joint bounty on my endeavours. It is therefore pity to part you. May no other difference be in your hearts, than what heraldry allows in your arms, only to distinguish the age of the elder from the younger; that so the memory of your happy father may survive in you his hopeful children.

HEN Kenulph, king of Mercia, sent a letter to Leo the third, pope, by ^{A.D. 800.} ^{Æthel- Egbert.} ^{The arch- bispopric restored to Canterbury at the instance of king Kenulph.} Whereas the metropolitan seat by authority apostolic was primitively fixed at Canterbury, where the blessed body of Augustine was buried; and whereas lately king Offa, out of opposition to archbishop Lambert, had removed the same seat to ^a [1. Arms. Gules, on a fess raguled, or, three martlets sable, a canton ermine.

2. The same with a crescent for difference: as the coat of a second son.

By the visitation of London made by sir Richard St. George, Clarenceux, king at arms, 1663, it appears that William was the eldest, and Robert the second and youngest son of William Christmas of London, merchant, then living, by his wife Susan, daughter of Thomas Endlin of Long Ditton, co. Surrey. The said William was the second son of Robert Christmas, of a good family seated at Guilford in that county. B.]

A.D. 800. Lichfield, and procured from pope Adrian the ^{same}
^{1. Egbert.} translation to be confirmed: Kenulph requested his holiness so far to concur with the general desire of the English nation, as to revoke the act of his predecessor, and restore the archbishopric to its proper place^a. And knowing that suits in the court of Rome speed no whit the less when accompanied with gifts, he sent his holiness one hundred and twenty mancuses^b for a present. The gift was kindly accepted, the archbishop courteously entertained, the request bountifully granted; and thus the archbishop's see, dislocated, or out of joint for a time, was by the hands of his holiness set right again.

A.D. 803. ^{The first} Ethelheard returning home, called a synod at Cloves-ho in Kent, not far from Rochester, where by power from the pope he riveted the archbishopric into the city of Canterbury, the synod denouncing heavy penalties to any that hereafter should endeavour to divide them: so that it is believed, that the archbishop's see may as easily be wholly dissolved, as hence removed. The subscriptions in this council were the most formal and solemn of any so ancient. The reader will not be offended with their hard names here following, seeing his eye may run them over in perusing them, though his tongue never touch them in pronouncing them^c.

^a Malmsh. de Gestis Reg. f. 16. Ethelheard went to Rome in the year 799. See the Sax. Chron. and Florentius Wigorniens. in ann. According to the same Chronicles, and Malmshury (ibid.), Ecgfrith succeeded in the year 802; according to Sime. Dunelm. in 802. De Gestis Reg. in ann.

^b Mancus quia manu exar-a com about the valuation wherof is much variety. See Twysden's Glossary, c. 1, and Foxe's Martyrol. I. 481.

^c The original is extant in the records of Canterbury, copied out by Spelman in his Concil. I. 325 (Wilkus, I.
167.)

Diocese.	Bishops.	Abbots.	Presbyters.	Deacons.	A. D. 803.
Canterbury . . .	{ Æthelheard arch.	{ Æthilheah Feologeld	{ Vulfheard Vueronth Beornmod Lulla Monn Vuigferht Eadhere Cuthberht	{ Vulfred, arch.	4 Egberti.
Lichfield . . .	Alduulf . . .	Hygberht		* * * *
Leicester . . .	Vuerenberht . . .	{ Ealhmund, pr. Beonna, pr. Forthred, pr. Vuigmund, pr.	{ Eadberht	* * * *
Syndnacester . . .	Eaduulf . . .	{ Eadred, pr. Daeghelm, pr.	{ Plegberht Eadulf Hereberht	* * * *
Worcester . . .	Deneberht . . .	{ Hygberht Thineferth Pega Freothomund, pr.	{ Cenferth	* * * *
Hereford . . .	Vulfheard . . .	Cuthraed	{ Srygol Dygoga Monn.	Heathobald
Schireburn . . .	Wigberht . . .	{ Muda Eadberht Beorthmund Cuthberht	* * * * * * *
Winchester . . .	Alhmund . . .	{ Mark Cumba Lulla	{ Northeard Vngthe	* * * *
Helmham . . .	Ealheard . . .	* * * *	{ Folcberht Frithobert Eadberht Wlfab	Hunfrid
Dunwich . . .	Tidfrith . . .	{ Vulfheard Lulla	{ Ceolhelm Cynewulf Tyberth Wigheard	Eadberht ^d
London . . .	Osmond . . .	{ Heahstan Plegberht	{ Tidhun Frithorad Æthelhelm Lullingo Tuda	* * * *
Rochester . . .	Weormund . . .	* * * *	{ Beagnoth Heathoberht Wigheard Dudda Eadberht	* * * *
Selsey . . .	Weoththun . . .	Ceolmund	{ Beorcol Heahfrid Cynebald	* * * *
Archbishop	1		Presbyters	39
Bishops	12		Archdeacon	1	82 in all.
Abbots	26		Deacons	3

^d [After this name is a blank, priest.]
and therefore it is not certain ^e Doubtful whether priests whether he were deacon or or deacons.

A.D. 803.
4 Egbert.

Some observables on the method and manner of their meeting.

3. Now to make a short but necessary digression. In this synod we may observe, that bishops appeared personally, and the rest of the clergy were represented, monks in their abbots, and the seculars in the priests and deacons of their diocese respectively. Such abbots as in this catalogue have the addition of pr. were also priests, and so present in a double capacity; though perchance they made only use of their abbotship. No deans appear here, as a dignity of far later institution. The bishops, in the order of their subscriptions, seem to observe seniority of their consecrations, and not dignity of their bishoprics: seeing London lags one of the last, to which our church-heralds did afterwards assign the highest place next the archbishops¹: only Lichfield may seem to have had the precedence, by the courtesy of the synod, that the lost dignity thereof might be buried in honour, being so lately the seat of an archbishop. Lastly, this was but a provincial council for Canterbury alone, York with his two suffragans, Lindisfarn and Hexham, not mentioned in the meeting. Thus, as the anatomy of a little child, representing all parts thereof, is accounted a greater rarity than the skeleton of a man of full stature, so I conceive it more acceptable to the studious in antiquity to behold the form of these synods, with the distinct members thereof, in the infancy of the Saxon church, than to see a complete council in after-ages, when grown to full perfection.

A.D. 816.
The acts of the council at Cel-lyth.

4. Pass we by some petty synods celebrated in the reign and country of king Kenulph of Mercia. Eminent was the council at Celichyth under Wulfred

¹ Harpfield, Hist. Ang. p. 743

(who succeeded Æthelheard) archbishop of Canterbury. Wherein, amongst other things slight or superstitious, was decreed,

i. That the catholic faith should be kept, and ancient canons observed.

ii. That new churches should be consecrated with holy water by their bishops, and the saint somewhere painted therein to whom the same is dedicated.^s

iii. That all in Christian charity mutually love one another.

iv. That abbots and abbesses be blameless persons, chosen by the bishop with the consent of the convent.

v. That no Scotchman baptize or administer the eucharist in England ; it being uncertain whether or by whom they are ordained. (We may discover herein some remaining dregs of the long-lasting difference about the celebration of Easter, which made the suspicious English still to harbour a causeless prejudice against the Scotch priesthood.)

vi. That the judicial sentences of bishops in former synods remain ratified ; as also all their acts solemnly signed with the cross.

vii. That no abbey-lands be leased out longer than in dies, et spatium unius hominis ; (that is, as I take it, for the single life of one man;) except in some case of extremity, to help against famine, invasion of foes, or for obtaining of freedom.

viii. That things dedicated to God remain so for ever.

^s See Spelman's Concil. I. 328. [Wilkins, I. 169. The passage referred to runs thus in the original: "Præcipimus unius episcopo, ut habeat

" depictum in pariete oratorii,
" aut in tabula, vel etiam in aliis
" tabulis, quibus sanctis sint
" utraque dedicata."]

A.D. 816.
17 Egberti. ix. That the acts of all synods be fairly written out, with the date thereof, and name of the archbishop president, and bishops present therat.

x. That bishops at their death give the full tithe of their goods to the poor, and set free every Englishman which in their lifetime was a slave unto them.

xi. That bishops invade not the diocese, priests the parish, neither the office of another, save only when desired to baptize or visit the sick. The refusors whereof in any place are to be suspended their ministry till reconciled to the bishop.

xii. That they pour not water upon the heads of infants, but immerse them in the font, in imitation of Christ, who, say they, was thrice so washed in Jordan.

But where is this in scripture? The manifestation indeed of the Trinity plainly appears in the text: Father in the voice, Son personally present, Holy Spirit in the dove^b; but as for thrice washing him, altum silentium. However, see how our modern sectaries meet popery in shunning it, requiring the person to be plunged; though critics have cleared it, that baptize doth import as well dipping as drenching in water.

Eggbryht proclaimed monarch of England.

5. And now we take our farewell of king Kenulph, who, for all his great bustling in church matters for the first twenty years in this century, was (as genus subalternum amongst the logicians) a king over his subjects, yet but a subject to king Eggbryht, who now at Winchester was solemnly crowned monarch of the southern and greater moiety of this island, enjoining all the people therein to term it Engeland, since England, that so the petty names of sever-

^a Matt. iii. 16-17

former distinct kingdoms might be honourably buried ^{A. D. 820.}
²¹ Egberti.

6. Some will wonder, seeing this nation was compounded of Saxons, Jutes, and Angles, why it should not rather be denominated of the first, as in number greatest, and highest in reputation. Such consider not that a grand continent in Germany was already named Saxony; and it was not handsome for this land to wear a name at second-hand belonging to another. Besides, England is a name of credit, importing in Dutch the same with the land of angels^k. And now the name stamped with the king's command soon became current, and extinguished all the rest. For Kent, Essex, Sussex, Northumberland, though remaining in common discourse, shrunk from former kingdoms into modern counties: Westsex, Mercia, and East-Angles were in effect finally forgotten. It will not be amiss to wish that seeing so great a tract of ground meets in one name, the people thereof may agree in Christian unity and affections.

7. King Ecg'bryht was now in the exaltation of his ^{Danes disturbed king} Eg'bryht. greatness. But never will human happiness hold out full measure to man's desire. Freed from home-bred hostility, he was ready to repose himself in the bed of ease and honour; when the Danes not only jogged his elbows, but pinched his sides, to the dis-

ⁱ [Mercia was not subject to Ecg'bryht, king of the West-Saxons, till some years after. Kenulph died in 819, and after various engagements between Ecg'bryht, and the various kings of Mercia who succeeded Kenulph, that kingdom fell into the hands of Ecg'bryht in the year 827, and Ecg'bryht became master of all the Cisumbrane provinces. See the Saxon Chron. and Flor. Wigorn. in an. 819 and 827. Malm. f. 17, 19.]

^k Verstegan of decayed intelligence, [p. 148.]

A.D. 833. turbance of his future quiet. They beat the English 34 Egbert. in a naval fight at Carmouth in Dorsetshire, which proved fatal to our nation¹. For an island is never an island indeed, until mastered at sea, cut off from commerce with the continent. Henceforward their pagans settled themselves in some part of the land, though claiming it by no other title than their own pride and covetousness, and keeping it in no other tenure than that of violence and cruelty.

A.D. 836. 8. Ethelwol-
 phi. Ethelwol-phus his universal grant of tithes to the church.

Ethelwol-
 phus his son succeeded king Egbert in the throne: a prince not less commended for his valour than devotion, and generally fortunate in his undertakings, though much molested all his lifetime by the Danes. But nothing makes him so remarkable to posterity, as the granting of this charter, or rather the solemn passing of this act ensuing².

“ Regnante Domino nostro Iesu Christo, in per“ petuum. Dum in nostris temporibus bellorum in“ cendia, et direptiones opum nostrarum, ne non et “ vastantium crudelissimas depredationes hostium, “ barbararum, paginarumque gentium multiplies“ tribulationes ad affligendum usque ad interro-“ nem, cernimus tempora incumbere pericula:

“ Quamobrem ego Ethelwolphus rex occidentalium “ Saxonum, cum consilio episcoporum ac principum “ meorum, consilium salubre atque uniforme revo“ dum affirmavi, ut aliquam portionem terrarum “ hereditariam antea possidentibus omnibus gradu-“ bus, sive famulis et famulabus Dei, Deo servienti“ bus, sive laicis, semper decimam mansionem ubi

¹ [The first descent was at Sheppey in the year 832. See the Sax. Chron. and Flot. Wil. born in 832. Malmsh. De Gest. Reg. (f. 22)]

² Ex Ingulph. Hist. Croz. land. (p. 17) et Malmsh. de Gest. Reg. (f. 22)

" minimum sit, tamen partem decimam in libertatem A. D. 836.
 " perpetuam perdonari dijudicavi, ut sit tuta ac ¹ Ethelwol-
 " munita ab omnibus secularibus servitutibus, necnon
 " regalibus tributis majoribus et minoribus, sive
 " taxationibus, quod nos dicimus Witereden: sitque
 " libera omnium rerum pro remissione animarum
 " nostrarum ad serviendum Deo soli sine expeditione,
 " et pontis instructione, et arcis munitione, ut eo di-
 " ligentius pro nobis ad Deum preces sine cessatione
 " fundant, quo eorum servitutem in aliqua parte
 " levigamus.

" Placuit etiam episcopis Alhstano Schireburnen-
 " sis" ecclesiæ, et Swithuno Wintoniensis ecclesiæ,
 " cum suis Abbatibus, et servis Dei, consilium inire,
 " ut omnes fratres, et sorores nostræ, ad unamquam-
 " que ecclesiam omni hebdomada die Mercurii, hoc
 " est, Weddenden, cantent quinquaginta Psalmos,
 " et unusquisque presbyter duas missas, unam pro
 " rege Ethelwlpho, et aliam pro ducibus ejus huic
 " dono consentientibus, pro mercede et refrigerio
 " delictorum suorum: et pro rege vivente dicant:
 " Oremus. Deus qui justificas; pro ducibus etiam
 " viventibus, Prætende Domine; postquam autem
 " defuncti fuerint, pro rege defuncto singulariter, et
 " pro principibus defunctis communiter. Et hoc sit
 " tam firmiter constitutum omnibus Christianitatis
 " diebus, sicut libertas illa constituta est, quamdiu
 " fides crescit in gente Anglorum.

" Scripta est autem hæc donationis cartula anno
 " dominicæ incarnationis 856 indictione quarta, die
 " quinto nonas Novembris, in civitatæ Wentana, in

" [It was by the activity and ~~cess~~fully to oppose the Danes.
 talents of this bishop that Malms. f. 20.]
 Æthelwolf was enabled suc.

D. 836. “ ecclesia sancti Petri ante altare capitale; et hoc Ethelwol-“ fecerunt pro honore sancti Michaelis archangeli et “ sanctae Mariae reginae, gloriose Dei genitricis: “ simulque et beati Petri apostolorum principis, ne-“ non et sanctissimi patris nostri Gregorii papae, atque “ omnium sanctorum. Et tunc pro ampliori firmi-“ tate rex Ethelwlfus posuit cartulam super altare “ S. Petri, et episcopi pro fide Dei accepserunt, et “ postea per omnes ecclesias transmiserunt in eis “ parochiis, secundum quod praedictum est.”

D. 855. This Ethelwolhus was designed by his father to be bishop of Winchester, bred in a monastery, after taken out, and absolved of his vows by the pope, and having had church-education in his youth, retained to his old age the indelible character of his affections therunto. In expression wherof, in a solemn council kept at Winchester, he subjected the whole kingdom of England to the payment of tithes, as by the foregoing instrument doth appear. He was the first born monarch of England. Indeed, before his time there were monarchs of the Saxon heptarchy; but not successive and fixed in a family, but fluctuating from one kingdom to another. Eg-bryht, father to this Ethelwulf, was the first that

^o [See Wilkins' Cone. L. 84. for other copies of this celebrated instrument; they vary from each other in a few verbal expressions. The date of it is certainly 855, which coincides with the third induction. The only writer of credit who varies from this date is Malmesbury, who places it in the year 844, and the fourth induction. But the fourth induction does not fall upon the year 844, nor any thing near it. The date 844 is therefore a clerical error for 855, for 841, which is the only year it could possibly be, is entirely out of the question, and I have altered it accordingly.]

This grant of a tithe of the land for the church must be separated from a grant of a tithe of land to the poor by the same king. (Of which see Malmesb. f. 22.)

achieved this monarchy, and left it to this his son, not ^{A.D. 855.} monarcha factus, but natus, and so in unquestionable ^{to Ethel-} wolph. power to make the foresaid act obligatory over all the land.

9. Indeed, before his time many acts for tithes ^{Former acts for tithes in-} are produced, which when pressed will prove of no ^{firm.} great validity. Such are the imperial edicts in civil law, never possessed of full power in England; as also the canons of some councils and popes, never admitted into plenary obedience by consent of prince and people. Add to these, first, such laws as were made by king Ina and Offa, monarchs indeed of England in their turns, as I may say, but not deriving the same to the issue of their bodies: so that their acts as personal may by some froward spirits be cavilled at, as determining with their own lives. Join to these (if producible) any provincial constitutions of an English archbishop (perchance Egbertus of York): those might obey them, who would obey, being otherwise not subject to any civil penalty. But now this act of Aethelwolphus appears entire in all the proportions of a law, made in his great council, equivalent to after-parliaments, not only cum consilio episcoporum, with the advice of his bishops, which easily may be presumed willingly to concur in such a matter of church-advancement, but also principum meorum, of my princes, saith he, the consent of inferior persons not being required in that age.

10. However, nothing can be so strong but it may meet with cavils, though not to destroy, to disturb the validity thereof, as this act hath; and we will severally examine the defects charged upon it.

Obj. 1. Some object that Aethelwolphus was but

A.D. 855
to Eadh-wulf.

king of the West-Saxons, as appears by his style rex occidentium Saxonum, and not universal monarch of England, whose act only is obligatory to his own subjects. Let those of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Dorset, Hants, Wilts, and Berks pay tithes by virtue of this command; other parts of the land are freed from the same, because nihil dat quod non habet, none can derive that to others which they enjoy not themselves; being king but of a part, he could not lay this law upon all the land.

Ans. He is termed eminently, not exclusively, king of the West-Saxons: being fondest of that title, as his father's first inheritance, before he acquired the monarchy of the whole land. There were indeed at this time two other royalets, as only kings by his leave, viz. Burhred king of Mercia, and Edmond king of East-Angles, who, as it plainly appears by Ingulphus, were present at his council, and consented to the acts thereof.

Qbj. 2. The consideration was superstitious to say so many masses for the souls of this king and his captains when deceased.

Ans. A double consideration is mentioned in this grant. The first, general; so pious in itself, no exception can be taken thereto, viz. to divert the imminent judgments of God from the land, hourly fearing the invasion of fierce foreign pagans: so the

1. This is a needless question. Egbert, the father of Ethelwulf, was monarch of all England, intra Britannia patet (Miles, t. 2). Thus poor at his death, devoted to Ethelwulf, he contented himself with the kingdom of the West-Saxons, delegating the rest of his authority to his son Ethelstan. Saxon Chro. and Flor Wigorn, in Act. M. M. 54. See particularly Flor Wigorn, in Act. H. S. 348. Exemplified in Act. H. S. 348. Spelman's Concil. I. 348.

better to secure the nine parts thereof to himself ^{A.D. 855.} and his subjects, by setting apart, resigning, and sur-²⁰ Ethel-rendering a tenth to God, the supreme landlord of all, in such as attended his daily service. The second consideration is more restrictive and particular, and resents indeed of the ignorance of that age; but yet is proportionable to the best devotion those days produced: and easily may an accidental abuse be purged by the pious use intended and designed generally to God's glory.

Obj. 3. The king only granted tithes of his own crown-land, non in dominio, sed in dominico suo, “not in all his dominions, but only in his de-“mesnes.”

Ans. There needed no such solemn consent of the council of the land for the passing away of his private bounty. And that the grant extended to the kingdom in general, appears by other authors on the same. Adelwulfus decimo nono anno regni sui, qui totam terram suam ad opus ecclesiarum decimavit propter amorem Dei, &c.^r More plainly another author: In eodem anno decimavit Athulf rex de omni possessione sua in partem Domini, et in unirerso regi-mine sui principatus sic constituit^s.

11. Here we insist not on the many arguments ^{Store no} out of Old and New Testament to prove tithes to be jure dirino; which in due time may be produced,
when all tempests of tumultuous spirits are allayed, and when (what the town-clerk of Ephesus promised to the citizens thereof) the question may be determined, ἐν τῇ ἐννόμῳ ἐκκλησίᾳ^t, in a lawful and ordinary assembly, without fear of force, and suspicion of ^r Hen. Huntind. Hist. f. 200.

^s [Ethelwerdi Chronicon. f. 478, b.]

^t Acts xix. 39.

— A.D. 855. violence. For two strings to a bow do not aim, to Ethel-
being no hinderance to the archer for the better wulph. hitting of the mark, who may wind up one, and use that for the present which he sees most for his own convenience. Meantime most true it is, that men are not so conscientious to obey the laws of God, as fearful to resist the edicts of men: and therefore, though far be it from the clergy to quit their title to tithes by divine right, they conceive it the ~~surest~~ way sometimes to make use of human injunctions, as having the most potent influence on men's affections, especially in this age, when the love of many, both to God and goodness, beginneth to wax cold.

A pleasant passage

12. A reverend doctor in Cambridge¹, and afterwards bishop of Salisbury, was troubled at his small living at Hogginton with a peremptory anabaptist, who plainly told him, "It goes against my conscience
" to pay you tithes, except you can shew me a place
" of scripture whereby they are due unto you." The doctor returned; "Why should it not go as much " against my conscience, that you should enjoy your
" nine parts, for which you can shew no place of " scripture?" To whom the other rejoined; "But I " have for my land deeds and evidences from my
" fathers, who purchased, and were peaceably pos" sessed thereof by the laws of the land." "The " same is my title," saith the doctor, "tithes being
" confirmed unto me by many statutes of the land
" time out of mind." Thus he drove that nail, not which was of the strongest metal or sharpest point, but which would go best for the present. It was argumentum ad hominem, fittest for the person be-

¹ Fuller doubtless alludes to his uncle, Dr. John Davenant, Bishop of Salisbury.

was to meddle with ; who afterwards peaceably payed ^{A.D. 855.} his tithes unto him. Had the doctor engaged in ²⁰ Ethelwolph. scripture-argument, though never so pregnant and pertinent, it had been endless to dispute with him, who made clamour the end of his dispute, whose obstinacy and ignorance made him uncapable of solid reason ; and therefore the worse the argument, the better for his apprehension.

13. Most solid and ingenious was the answer of a ^{A solid an-} most eminent sergeant at law of this age, to the im-^{swear of a} pertinent clamours of such against the payment of ^{learned} tithes, because, as they say, due only by human right.
“ My cloak is my cloak by the law of man : but he “ is a thief by the law of God that taketh it away
“ from me.”

14. True it is that this law did not presently find ^{This law} an universal obedience in all the land. And the ^{not present-} wonder is not great, if at the first making thereof it ^{ly and per-} met with many recusants; since, corroborated by eight ^{fectly} hundred years' prescription, and many confirmations, ^{obeyed.} it finds obstacles and oppositions at this day : for in succeeding ages several kings confirmed the same, though papal exemptions of several orders, and modus decimandi according to custom, have almost since tithed the tithes in some places.

15. King Æthelwolhus the next year took his ^{A.D. 856.} (call it progress or) pilgrimage to Rome, where the ^{King} report of his piety prevented his arrival, and pro-^{Æthel-} vided both welcome and wonder for his entertain-^{wulf's} ment. Here he confirmed unto the pope his prede-^{journey to} cessors' grant of Peter-pence, and, as a surplusage, ^{Rome, and} bestowed upon him the yearly revenue of three hun-^{bounty to} dred marks, thus to be expended^{w:}

^w Malmsbury, [f. 20, b. 22.]

A.D. 856.
21 Ethelwolph.

- i. To maintain candles for St. Peter, one hundred marks.
- ii. To maintain candles for St. Paul, one hundred marks.
- iii. For a free largess to the pope, one hundred marks.

How this sum was divided, and collected out of several dioceses.

16. If any be curious to know how these three hundred marks were in after-ages divided and collected, let them peruse the following account: if the particulars be truly cast up, and (attested to me out of sir T. Cotton's library²), and, as they say, out of the Vatican itself) be authentical.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Canterbury.....	8	8	0	Winchester.....	17	6	9
London	16	10	0	Covent. and Lich- field.	41	3	0
Rochester	5	12	0	Exeter	9	3	0
Norwich	21	10	0	Worcester	10	3	0
Salisbury	17	0	0	Bath and Wells	12	3	0
Ely	5	0	0	York	11	10	0
Lincoln	42	0	0
Chichester	8	0	0

These sums were demanded by pope Gregory the ³ (Perhaps Julius, B. iii. f. 49. In a MS. in Queen's college library, Oxford, which belonged to sir Robert Cotton, and retains his autograph, the sums are stated thus:

" De Cantuariensi diaconis	viii	xxviii	" De Londoniensi	xxvii	ii
" De Roffensi.	v	xx	" De Norwicensi.	xxii	2
" De Elen.	v	-	" De Lancastriensi.	x	ii
" De Cestrensi.	viii	-	" De Wintonensi.	xxv	ii
" De Excestriensi.	ix	3	" De Wigornensi.	ii	2
" De Herefordensi.	vi	-	" De Bathensi.	ii	2
" De Sarisburiensi.	viii	-	" De Glastoniensi.	ii	2
" De Eboraciensi.	viii	-

" Dat: apud veterem urbem v. kal. Maii anno mcccxxiiii.

" Summa totali. cxxxxiv. xvii. viii.⁴ See also another copy in Foxe's Martyrol. I. 483. In the succeeding passage Fuller has made a mistake in the name of the pope. It was evidently Gregory XI, not Gregory XIII.

The reader will find the bull printed entire in Somers Tracts. I. 21. (ed. 1869.)

Thirteenth in the 46th of Edward the Third, on that ^{A.D. 856.} ~~21~~ ^{Æthel-} token, that their payment was much opposed by ^{wolph.} John of Gaunt. I dare not discede from my copy a tittle, coming, as they say, from the register at Rome: nor will I demand a reason why Durham and Carlisle^y are here omitted, much less examine the equity of their proportions, as applied to their respective dioceses; but implicitly believe all done very justly. The reason why the Welsh bishoprics were exempted is, because at the grant hereof by king Æthelwulf, Wales was not then under his dominion. This three hundred marks was but a distinct payment by itself, and not the whole body of Peter-pence, (amounting to a greater sum,) whereof, God willing, hereafter.

17. After the death of king Æthelwolphus, and ^{A.D. 866.} ~~1~~ ^{Æthelred.} his two sons Æthelbald and Æthelbert succeeding ^{The Saxons} him, this land was in a sad condition, though nothing ^{wilfully ac-} so bad as under the reign of Æthelred his third son ^{cessory to} ~~their own~~ ^{ruin by the} and successor: for then indeed most miserable was ~~Danes.~~ the state of the English, harassed by the Danes, who, like the running gout, shifted from joint to joint, from place to place; often repelled from the several shires, never expelled out of England. The Saxon folly hurt them more than the Danish fury; refusing effectually to unite to make a joint resistance against a general enemy. For some sixty years since, the West-Saxons had subdued the other six kings of this nation; yet so that they still continued kings, but homagers to the West-Saxon monarchy. The shortening of their sceptres stuck in their stomachs, especially of the Mercian and Northumbrian kings,

^y [Carlisle was not erected into a see till the reign of Henry I.]

A.D. 866. the most puissant of all the rest. Whereupon, ~~holding~~^{1. Ethelred.} holding Ethelred, the West-Saxon king, the staff and stay of the whole nation, embroiled with the invasion of the Danes, they not only lazily looked on, but secretly smiled at this sight, as the only way to conquer the conqueror^{2.} Yea, such their envy, that rather than one (once their equal) should be above them in felicity, they all would be equal with him in misery. They would more contentedly be slaves to a foreign foe, to whom they all stood unrelated, than homagers to him, who had, as they thought, usurped dominion over them. Never considering that the Danes were pagans; (self-interest is deaf to the checks of conscience;) and revenge, which is wild at the best, was so mad in them, that they would procure it with the hazard, if not loss, of their God, his church, and true religion. Thus the height of the Saxon pride and envy caused the breadth of the Danish power and cruelty. Indeed, the forward Saxon kings, perceiving their error, endeavoured at last to help the West-Saxons (or rather to help themselves in him) against the Danes. But alas! it was too late. For the Danish garrisons lay so indented in the heart of the land, that the Saxon troops were blasted before they could grow into regiments, and their strength, dispersed in the gathering, was routed before regulated into an army.

A.D. 870. 18. This year the Danes made an invasion into Lincolnshire, where they met with stout resistance: and let us take a list of the chief officers on both sides.

Christian Saxons: — *Count Algar, general with the youth of Hoyland: Harding de Rebale,

^{1. See Malmesb. f. 23. 2. Ingulph Hist. f. 492 = p. 20. 2.}

with Stanford men, all very young and valiant: ^{A. D. 870.} Tolius a monk, with a band of two hundred ^{5 Ethelred.} Crow-landers^b: Morcardus lord of Brunne, with those of his numerous family: Osgot ^csheriff of Lincolnshire, with five hundred under him: Wibert, living at Wi-berton, nigh Boston in Hoyland: Leofric, living at Leverton, anciently Lefrinkton, places named from their owners.

Danish pagans :—King Gordroum: King Baseg:
King Osketil: King Halfden: King Hamond:
Count Frena: Count Unguar: Count Ubba: Count
Sidrok the elder: Count Sidrok the younger.

The Christians had the better the first day, wherein the Danes lost three of their kings, buried in a place thence called Trekingham: so had they the second, till at night, breaking their ranks to pursue the Danes in their dissembled flight, they were utterly overthrown.

19. Theodore abbot of Crowland, hearing of the Danes' approach, shipped away most of his ^{Crowland} ^{monks} _{massacred.} monks, with the choicest relics and treasures of his convent, and cast his most precious vessels into a well in the cloister. The rest remaining were at their morning prayers, when the Danes entering, slew Theodore the abbot on the high altar; Asker the prior in the vestiary; Lethwyne the sub-prior in the refectory;
Pauline in the choir; Herbert in the choir; Wlric
the torchbearer in the same place; Grimketul and

^b [These Crowlanders were persons who had taken refuge in the monastery of Croyland; their general Tollius was a soldier who had assumed the monastic habit. “ Miles ante “ suam conversionem per totam

“ Merciam in bellicis artibus “ nominatissimus, sed tunc a“ more cœlestis patriæ, relicito “ sæculo, spirituali militiæ “ apud Croylandiam manci“ patus.” Ingulph. ib.]
“ Vice dominus.

A.D 870. Agamund, each of them an hundred years old, in the Æthelred. cloisters.

These, saith my author^d, were first criminati, tortured to betray their treasure, and then criminari, put to death for their refusal. The same writer seems to wonder, that being killed in one place, their bodies were afterwards found in another. Surely the corpse removed not themselves, but no doubt the Danes dragged them from place to place when dead. There was one child-monk therein, but ten years old, Turgar by name, of most lovely looks and person. Count Sidrok the younger, pitying his tender years, (all devils are not cruel alike,) cast a Danish coat^e upon him, and so saved him, who only survived to make the sad relation of the massacre.

Peterborough monks killed. Monastery burned.

20. Hence the Danes marched to Medeshamsted, since called Peterborough, where finding the abbey gates locked against them, they resolved to force their entrance; in effecting whereof, Tulba, brother to count Hulba, was dangerously wounded, almost to death, with a stone cast at him. Hulba enraged hereat, like another Doeg, killed abbot Hedda, and all the monks, being fourscore and four, with his own hand. Count Sidrok gave an item to young monk Turgar, who hitherto attended him, in no wise to meet count Hulba, for fear that his Danish livery should not be found of proof against his fury. Then was the abbey set on fire, which burned fifteen days together, wherein an excellent library was consumed. Having pillaged the abbey, and broke open the tombs and coffins of many saints there interred, these pagans marched forwards into Cambridgeshire, and

^d Ingulphus, c. 493 = p. 221.

^e In Lat. colobrum

passing the river Nene^f, two of their waggons fell A.D. 870.
into the water, wherein the cattle which drew them ⁵Æthelred.
were drowned, much of their rich plunder lost, and more impaired.

21. Some days after, the monks of Medeshamsted were buried altogether in a great grave, and their abbot in the midst of them, a cross being erected over the same, where one may have four yards square of martyrs' dust, which no place else in England doth afford. Godric, successor to Theodore, abbot of Crowland, used annually to repair hither, and to say masses two days together for the souls of such as were entombed. One would think that by popish principles these were rather to be prayed to than prayed for; many maintaining that martyrs go the nearest way to heaven, sine ambage purgatorii: so that surely Godric did it not to better their condition, but to express his own affection, out of the redundancy of his devotion, which others will call the superfluity of his superstition.

22. The Danes spared no age, sex, condition of people; such was the cruelty of this pagan unpartial sword. With a violent inundation they brake into the kingdom of the East-Angles; wasted Cambridge and the country thereabouts; burnt (the then city of) Thetford; forced Edmond, king of that country^g, into his castle of Framlingham; who perceiving himself unable to resist their power, came forth, and at the village of Hoxne in Suffolk tendered his person unto them, hoping thereby to save the effusion of his subjects' bloods. Where, after many in-

^f [Or Nen, in Northamptonshire. They were marching towards Huntingdon. See Ingulph, p. 23.] ^g [Ingulph, f. 494=p. 24. Malms. De Gest. f. 49, b. Joh. Bromton, Chron. p. 805.]

A.D. 870. dignities offered unto him, they bound him to a
5. Ethelbert. tree; and because he would not renounce his Christianity, shot him with arrow after arrow, their cruelty taking deliberation, that he might the better digest one pain before another succeeded, so distinctly to protract his torture, (though confusion be better than method in matters of cruelty,) till not merely, but want of a mark made them desist; according to the poets expression^b,

Jam loca vulneribus desunt, nec dum furoris
 Tela, sed hyberna grandine plura volant.

Room wants for wounds, but arrows do not fail
 From foes, which thicker fly than winter hail

After-ages, desiring to make amends to his memory, so over-acted their part in shrining, sainting, and adoring his reliques at Bury St. Edmonds, that, if those in heaven be sensible of the transactions on earth, this good king's body did not feel more pain from the fury of the pagan Danes, than his soul is filled with holy indignation at the superstition of the Christian Saxons.

King
Ethelbert
 his prayer, victory.

23. However, the West-Saxon king Ethelbert behaved himself bravely, fighting, with various success, nine battles against the Danes^c: though ninety-nine had not been sufficient against so numerous an enemy. But we leave these things to the historians of the state to relate. We read of an heap of stones, made between Jacob and Laban, with a mutual contract, that neither should pass the same for harm^d. Thus would I have ecclesiastical and civil historians indent about the bounds and limits of their subjects, that

^b Camden's Britann. in the 9th ed. l. 22. b. (Nine battles description of Suffolk, p. 342.) in one year. Malmsb. ibid.

^c Malmesbury De Gestis Reg. ^d Gen. xxii. 52.

neither injuriously encroach on the right of the other. A.D. 870.
 And, if I chance to make an excursion into the mat- ⁵ Æthelred.
 ters of the commonwealth, it is not out of curiosity or busybodiness to be meddling in other men's lines, but only in an amicable way, to give a kind visit,
 and to clear the mutual dependence of the church on the commonwealth. Yet let me say, that this war against the Danes was of church-concernment;
 for it was as much pro aris as pro focis, as much for religion as civil interest. But one war must not be forgotten¹. Importunate messengers brought the tidings that the English were dangerously engaged with the Danes at Æscæs-dune, (haply Essenden now, in Surrey^m,) and likely to be worsted. King Ethelbert was at his devotions, which he would not omit nor abbreviate for all their clamour. No suit would he hear on earth till first he had finished his requests to heaven. Then, having performed the part of pious Moses in the mountⁿ, he began to act valiant Joshua in the valley. The Danes are vanquished, leaving posterity to learn that time spent in prayer is laid out to the best advantage.

24. But alas! this Danish invasion was a mortal A.D. 871.
 wound, dedecus Saronicæ fortitudinis; the cure King whereof was rather to be desired than hoped for. Æthelbert Ease for the present was all art could perform. King Æthelbert saw that of these pagans the more he slew the more they grew, which went to his valiant with grief.

¹ [Asser, De Gestis Ælfredi, and the Saxon Chron. in the year 871. Malmsb. f. 23.]

^m [Aston, near Wallingford in Berkshire. Some however think that Ashendon in Buckinghamshire was the scene of this battle. Upon a careful examination of the authorities quoted above, there seems to be little doubt of this battle having been fought in Berkshire.]

ⁿ Exodus xvii. 11.

A. D. 871. heart. Grief is an heavy burden, and generally the
6. Ethelred. strongest shoulders are able to bear the least proportion thereof. The good king therefore withers away in the flower of his age, willingly preferred to encounter rather death than the Danes; for he knew how to make a joyful end with the one, but endless was his contest with the other: according to the observation of the English historian, that the Saxon kings in this age, magis optarent honestum exitum quam acerbum imperium.

A.D. 871. 25. In this sad condition God sent England a deliverer, namely, king Alfred, or Alured, born in England, bred in Rome, where, by a prolepsis, he was anointed king by pope Leo, though then but a private prince, and his three elder brothers alive, auspiciu[m] futuri regni, in hope that hereafter he should come to the crown. Nor did thisunction make Alfred antedate his kingdom, who quietly waited till his foresaid brothers successively reigned, and died before him, and then took his turn in the kingdom of the West-Saxons. The worst was, his condition was like a bridegroom, who, though lawfully wedded, yet might not bed his bride, till first he had conquered his rival; and must redeem England before he could reign over it. The Danes had London, many of the inland, mo of the maritime towns; and Alfred only three effectual shires, Somerset, Dorset, and Wilts; yet by God's blessing on his valour he got to be monarch of all England. Yea, consider him as a king in his court, as a general in his camp, as a Christian in his closet, as a patron in the church, as a founder in his college, as a father Malinesburnensis at prim. Malinesbury, f. 23 b., and (a) Hampshire, according to guiph., p. 26.)

in his family; his actions will every way appear no less excellent in themselves, than exemplary to others.

26. His most daring design was, when lying hid about Athelney in Somersetshire, and disguised under the habit of a fiddler, being an excellent musician, he adventured into the Danish camp^q. Had not his spirit been undaunted, the sight of his armed foes had been enough to have put his instrument out of tune. Here going unsuspected through their army, he discovered their condition, and some of their intentions. Some would say that the Danes deserved to be beaten indeed if they would communicate their counsels to a fiddler. But let such know, Alfred made this general discovery of them, that they were remiss in their discipline, lay idle and careless: and security disarms the best-appointed army. Themistocles said of himself, “that he could “not fiddle, but he knew how to make a little city “great.” But our Alfred could fiddle, and make a little city great too; yea, enlarge a petty and contracted kingdom into a vast and absolute monarchy.

27. But, as the poets feign of Anteus, the son of the earth, who fighting with Hercules, and often worsted by him, recovered his strength again every time he touched the earth, revived with an addition of new spirits: so the Danes, which may seem the sons of Neptune, though often beaten by the English in land battles, no sooner recovered their ships at sea, but presently recruiting themselves, they returned from Denmark more numerous and formidable than before. But at last (to follow the poetical

The Danish ships left water-bound.

^q [Malmesb. f. 23, b.]

A. D. 878.
⁸ Alfredi.

A.D. 878. fancy) as Hercules, to prevent Antaeus his father ~~re-~~
 8 Alfred. ~~—~~ living, hoisted him aloft, and held him strangled in his arms till he was stark dead and utterly expired: so, to secure the Danes from returning to the ~~sea~~, who out of the Thames had with their fleet sailed up the river Lea, betwixt Hertfordshire and Essex. Alfred with pioneers divided the grand stream of Lea into several rivulets; so that their ships lay water-bound, leaving their mariners to shift for themselves over land, most of which fell into the hands of their English enemies: so that this proved a mortal defeat to the Danish insolence.

^{The general} 28. Alfred having thus reduced England to some ^{ignorance} ~~in England~~ tolerable terms of quiet, made most of the Danes his subjects by conquest, and the rest his friends by composition, encountered a fiercer foe, namely, ignorance and barbarism, which had generally invaded the whole nation. Insomuch that he writeth, that south of Thames he found not any that could read English. Indeed in these days all men turned students; but what did they study? only to live secretly and safely from the fury of the Danes. And now, that the next age might be wiser than this, Alfred intended the founding of an university at Oxford.

^{Ancient} 29. Indeed, there were anciently standing on the ^{schools at} ~~Cirencester~~ banks of Isis, which in due time commeneth

[¶]I can find no authority for this statement. According to the Saxon Chronicle in the year 807 the Danes ascended the river Lea, twenty miles above London, and there erected a fort. To prevent their excursions, and obstruct the passage of their ships Alfred built a fort on each side of the river. The Danes finding themselves thus hemmed in, fled over land to Gloucester on the Severn, laying their ships a prey to the English; those the English took possession of and broke up; so they could impede the Danes.

Thamisis, two towns, one Crekelade or Greeklade, in ^{A. D. 878.} Wiltshire ; the other Lechlade or Latinlade, in ^{8 Alfredi.} Gloucestershire. In the former of these many years ^{and Lech-} lade. since (things time out of mind must not be condemned as time out of truth) the Greek tongue, as in the latter the Latin tongue, are said to be publicly professed by philosophers^s. But where was Hebrewlade, the Hebrew tongue being more necessary than both the former for the understanding of the Old Testament ? Alas ! in this age it was banished, not only out of England, but out of Christendom. As in the ordinary method of nature, the more aged usually die first ; so no wonder if Hebrew, generally presumed the oldest language in the world, expired first in this age of ignorance, utterly abolished out of the western countries. Yea, it is well the other two learned tongues were preserved in these places ; Crekelade and Lechlade being then cities of eminent note, shrunk now to mean towns, and content with plain English, where Latin and Greek were formerly professed.

30. But now the muses swam down the stream of ^{A. D. 882.} the river Isis, to be twenty miles nearer to the rising sun, and were by king Alfred removed from Crekelade and Lechlade to Oxford, where he founded an university. Yet some say Alfred did find, and

* [In his observations upon this passage Dr. Heylyn remarks ; " The country people, as it seems, do better understand themselves than our author doth. Amongst whom there is a common tradition that Crekelade was a university of Greek philosophers, Lechlade of leches or physicians, as the name doth intimate ; and Latton, a small village betwixt both, to be the place of study for the Latin tongue." He then proceeds to shew that Lechlade takes its name from the river Lech. Examen Hist. p. 40. The Appeal, &c. part II. p. 15.

The university first founded by Alfred at Oxford.

A.D. 882, not found letters therein, seeing there was a 12 Alfred. — sprinkling of students therein before; though learning was very low and little therein, till this considerable accession, when Alfred founded therein three colleges; one for grammarians, a second for philosophers, a third for divines. Take a list of their primitive professors:

In divinity: St. Grimbald, St. Neot.

In grammar: Asserius a monk.

In logic: John of St. David's¹.

In mathematics: Joannes Monachus².

It is credibly reported, that what is now called University college, was then one of king Alfred's foundations, as the verses written in their hall under his arms do attest:

Nobilis Alfredi sunt haec insignia, cuius

Primum constructa est haec pietate domus

And from this time learning flourished here in great plenty and abundance, though oftentimes abated; the universities feeling the impressions of the commonwealth.

King's-hall founded by king Alfred. 31. At the same time wherein king Alfred built University college in Oxford, he also founded another house called King's-great-hall, (intimating a lesser hard by,) now included within the compass of Brazen-nose college³. And hence it is that at this very day it payeth some chief rent to University college, as the ancient owner thereof. Here he placed Johannes Scotus (highly endeared in this king's affections) reader therein. On the clearing of whose extraction and opinions a long story doth depend!

¹ Wicks's Rox. Platonens. p. 111. "de monasterio S. David Me-
 221. ed. 1627."

² Evidently the same person. "Johannem monachum

"nevir ad se vocavit" Heden. p. 256

32. This Scotus is called Johannes Scotus Eri- A.D. 882.
gena, with addition sometimes of Sophista: so that ^{12 Alfredi.} — all may amount to a kind of definition of him as to ^{The birth-} his individual person. Conceive we Scotus for his ^{place of} Scotus.
 genus, which because homonymous in that age, as signifying both Scotland and Ireland, Erigena is added for his difference^v, that is, born, as some will have it, in Ireland, called Erin in their own country language^w. But Dempster, a Scotch writer, who will leave nothing that can be gotten above ground, yea, will dive and dig into the water and land of others,
 to the credit of his country, claimeth Scotus as born in Scotland, spelling him Airigena, from Aire, a small place therein^x. But besides unanswerable arguments to the contrary, gena is a termination seldom added to so restrictive a word, but, as Francigena, Angligena, denoteth generally the nation, not petty place of a man's extraction^y. As for Dempster, his credit runneth low with me, ever since he made pope Innocentius the First a Scotchman, because calling himself Albanus, (and Scotland forsooth is Albania,) it being notoriously known that the said Innocent was born at Long Alba nigh Rome. Yea, Bellarmino

^v Jac. Ware, de Scrip. Hib. p. 43. [ed. 1639.]

^w Mercat. Atlas, p. 34. [ed. Hond. 1621.]

^x Eccles. Hist. Scot. lib. i. §. 64. et lib. ix. §. 704.

^y [A very just account and several pleasing anecdotes of Johannes Scotus will be found in Malmsb. de Gestis Pontificum, v. p. 360. ed. Gale; and in Wharton, Angl. Sacr. II. 27. In the letter of pope Nicholas, of which an extract has been preserved by Malmsbury, this writer is called, “Johannes genere Scotus”; that is, an Irishman, for the term Scotus was not applied to natives of Scotland, as it is now called, till some time after. See the authorities quoted by Usher, Ant. Eccl. Brit. p. 382. sq. The discrepant opinions respecting Johannes Scotus are briefly recapitulated by Fabri- cius in his Bibliotheca Medie Latinitatis, ix. p. 136. ed. 1754.]

A.D. 882. himself said, reading the three books of Dempster.
 12 Alfred. wherein he hooketh in so many for his countrymen, that he thought that if he should add a fourth, he would make Jesus Christ himself to be a Saxon-man.

Wales has right to Scotus his birth.

33. All this while Wales stands modestly silent, with intention to put in her claim the last to Scotus his nativity, whom many writers make born at St. David's^a. Whilst some will have the epithet of Erigena affixed unto him, quasi spī yuñneros, "early-born," because of the timely rising of his parts (as a morning star) in those dark days: which I can better applaud for an ingenious allusion, than approve for a true and serious assertion. But be Scotus born where he please, most sure it is, by king Alfred he was made a professor of learning in Oxford.

Scotus,
smith Caius, studied at Cambridge.

34. I confess Caius maketh this John Scotus scholar to Bede, (as many good authors also do^b.) and brought up at Cambridge^c: to which the sons of our aunt are loath to consent, that one who was taught in Cambridge should teach in Oxford; and their eloquent orator^c falls very foul, save that it is some ease to be railed on in good Latin, on him for the same. Now because we Cambridge men are loath to take a limb of John Scotus, or any other learned man, more than what will come of itself, with the

^a Bale's Cent. ii. §. 24.

^b Trithemius, (115 ed. 1546.) et ejus sequaces. Apparently Trithemius is not speaking of the same person as Fuller. Trithemius distinguishes Johannes Scotus, a monk of the order of S. Benedict, from Johannes Erigena, the first a disciple of Bede, and flourising in the reign of Charlemagne, the other living in the time of Lotharius the emperor fifty years after. Trithem. de Script. Eccl. p. 115, 116.

^c Cajus de Ant. Cant. A. p. 157. ed. 1574.)

Wake's Rex. Placent. p. 212.

consent of chronology, and because I find Bale^d dis- A.D. 882.
likes the same, chiefly on the account of his impro- ^{12 Alfredi.} bable vivacity of an hundred and seventy years, I can be content to resign my particular title unto him, provided it be without prejudice to others of our university, who hereafter may challenge him with better arguments^e.

35. I much wonder that this Scotus should be so <sup>Miserably murdered by his scholars.</sup> degraded in his old age from Oxford to Malmsbury; from a professor in a university to a schoolmaster in a country town; where pouring learning into his lads, (rather in proportion to the plenty of the fountain than to the receipt of the vessels,) he was severe to such scholars as were dull in their apprehensions. This so irritated their anger against him, that by an universal conspiracy they dispatched him in the school with their penknives. I find not what punishment was inflicted upon them: whipping being too little if sturdy youths, and hanging too much if but little boys. Only I observe one Cassianus, a ^d Bale, ib.

^e [No good writer, as far as I can find, states that Johannes Scotus studied at either of the universities, if indeed they existed at the time. Scotus was the author of a tract, De Divisione Naturae, (since published at Oxford in 1681,) in which he had broached certain tenets abhorrent to the catholic faith. To avoid the ill consequences of this, according to Malmsbury, he left France, and came over to England, and had his residence appointed for him by the king, in the monastery of Malmsbury, where he was killed in the manner here described, and buried in the church of St. Laurence. In the year 1225, when this tract began to attract considerable attention, on account of the spreading of the tenets of the Albigenses, pope Honorius III. issued a bull, directed to all archbishops and bishops, enjoining them to make diligent search for all copies of the work, and to send it to Rome without delay to be burnt, as containing many heretical tenets. See this bull in Fabricius, ibid. See also Malmsb. f. 24, b.]

A. D. 882. schoolmaster in primitive times, sent the same way 12 Alfredi. — — — — — on the same occasion; his death being elegantly described by Prudentius⁴.

Unmartyred by Ba-ronius.

36. All the amends which is made to the memory of Scotus is, that he was made a martyr after his death, and his anniversary is remembered in the calendar on the fourth of the ides of November, in the Roman martyrology, set forth at Antwerp 1586, by the command of Gregory the Thirteenth. But since Baronius hath unmartyred him, and that on good reason, saith Henry Fitz-Simon⁵, attesting that an apology is provided, confirmed with approbation of many popes, cardinals, and many learned doctors justifying Baronius therein, which we, as yet, have not beheld. Indeed Scotus detected some superstitions of the times, especially about the presence in the Lord's Supper; and I have read⁶ that his book De Eucharistia was condemned in the Verulian synod for some passages therein by pope Leo⁷. This

⁴ Prudentius, in his Peristephanon, Hymn, ix. In Bib. Max. Patrum, vol. V. p. 1224. ed. 1677.

⁵ In 2 edit. Catal. SS. Hib. (p. 66). Published at the end of J. F. (Roth's) Hibernia Vindiciae, ed. 1621.

⁶ Joh. Parisiensis Hist. in anno 877, quoted in Mahusius, ab, and Bale, ib.

⁷ Held in the year 1138, when the book of Berengarius on the same subject was burnt. Berengarius was led to the opinions which he afterwards entertained of the eucharist, by reading Scot's book, which was probably the first time that attention was directed to wards it, which makes the suspicion of Fuller very improbable. He has forgotten the literary and theological state of England at the time. Besides, this work of Scotus was written at the desire of Charles the Bald, and probably was not published in England. This suspicion is rather derived from that absurd writer, Bale.

Scot and Berengarius had the same doctrine as Bertrand or Raimund, the author of whom bishop Rollier and other reformers derived their views of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. See Steyn's Grammer, p. 257.

makes it suspicious, that some hands of more age, A.D. 883.
and heads of more malice than schoolboys, might ^{12 Alfredi.} guide the penknives which murdered Scotus, because of his known opposition against some practices and opinions of that ignorant age.

37. It is much that this Scotus, though carrying ^{Scotus con- founded with other of his name- sakes.} in his name a comment on himself, that all should with other apprehensions, but that still they confound him with others of his name; sometimes with Johannes Scotus Mailrosius^k, sometimes with John Duns Scotus; though indeed there be difference enough of time, place, and other distinguishing characters betwixt them. Our present Scotus being most probably an Irishman, a great linguist in the learned tongues, a vast traveller into the eastern parts, a monk by profession, killed and buried at Malmesbury. The other Scotus born in Northumberland, skilled only (and that but meanly) in Latin, never travelling further than France and the hither part of Germany, a Franciscan by his order, dying of an apoplexy, and buried at Cologne; of whom, God willing, largely hereafter.

38. To return to king Alfred. As for the main- ^{The scholars main- tenance out of the king's ex- chequer.} tenance of the scholars, it issued forth annually from Alfred's exchequer, who made a fourfold division of his wealth^l; understand it of the surplusage thereof, more than what his court and camp expended: one part to the poor of all kinds that came and craved of him; a second to the monasteries of his own erection; a third to the school, understand Oxford, ^k Bale, ib.

^l Asserius Menevensis De Camden.]

A.D. 882. which he himself had founded ; the fourth and last 12 Alfred. to the neighbouring monasteries round about. However, we may easily believe that after his death the students of Oxford were often at a loss of livelihood. For, seeing the coffers of the greatest kings (especially in the time of war) are subject to a draught of coin, there must needs be a dearth in those colleges which are watered thence for their maintenance. Scholars may in time of peace, but soldiers must be paid in time of war. Wherefore, the most certain subsistence for scholars (so far forth as incertain things, as all sublunary can be made constant) is what ariseth from solid lands, wherewith they are endowed. For though even such revenues are subject to casualties, yet some water will ever be running, though the tide thereof may ebb or flow according to the fall or rise of commodities.

A.D. 883.
 Dimension betwixt the students at Oxford

39. But it is hard so to compose two swarms of bees in one hive but that they will fall out and fight. The college of logic, it seems, from the foundation thereof, studied divisions as well as distinctions ; there happening a dangerous difference betwixt the Aborigines and the Advenar, the old stock of students, and the new store brought in by St. Grimbald : the former, standing on their seniority, expected more respect unto themselves, deriving their privileges from their learned ancestors, time out of mind, which the Grimbaldists would not consent unto. Both sides appealed to Alfred as their patron¹². He coming to Oxford, carried himself with much moderation, as accounting that agreement most durable into which the parties were persuaded, not commanded. Grimbald, expecting king Alfred's zealous A.D. 885.

See Ascer, p. 12, and p. 133, ed. W. & J.

engaging on his side, according to the conceived ^{15 Alfred.} merits of his cause, was not a little offended that the king did not appear more resolute in his behalf. Insomuch that he forsook Oxford, wherein he had formerly built the church of St. Peter from the very foundation, with stone most curiously wrought and polished, and translated both himself and his intended tomb thence to Winchester.

40. An antiquary tells us, that the ancient arms ^{The arms of Oxford.} were assigned to Oxford about this time, namely, in a field azure, a Bible with seven seals appendant thereunto, opened (at the beginning of St. John's Gospel, In the beginning was the Word, &c.) betwixt three crowns or: which three crowns, saith he, signify the three senses of the scriptureⁿ: in the which, I confess, I do not understand him. For either we must admit but one sense of the scripture, as principally intended therein, which is the general opinion of the protestants, or if, with the papists, we will allow mo senses than one, we must conclude four, namely, the literal, allegorical, moral, and anagogical^o. What if the three crowns import the three professions which Alfred here founded, and all necessary to the understanding of the book betwixt them? Grammar, to understand the letter; philosophy, the reason; and divinity, the mystery of the scripture.

41. One of the first scholars of note whom I find ^{One, once a swine-herd, made bishop of Winchester.} bred in Oxford, was one Denulfus, once a swine-herd in Athelney, when Alfred lurked therein, being ⁿ Brian Twyne in Apolog. prima pars, quæst. 1. art. 10.

Antiq. Oxon. [p. 201.] [p. 3. ed. 1604.]

^o Aquinas, Summa Theolog.

A.D. 885, the king's host, who entertained him, or rather his master, whom the king served. Alfred perceiving in him pregnancy of parts, (though stifled with the narrowness, and crippled with the lowness of his vocation,) sent him to Oxford¹⁵, where he became, after some years' study, doctor in divinity, and was by the king, in gratitude, preferred to be bishop of Winchester¹⁶. But the monks of Winchester are so proud and sullen, they disdain to accept this man for their bishop, affirming, that their see stood void at this time¹⁷; more willing to confess a vacancy, than admit a swineherd into their episcopal chair. Whereas surely Alfred, so great a scholar and good a man, would not have advanced him per saltum, from a swineherd to a bishop, had he not been qualified by intermediate degrees of education. For mine own part, I see no reason why Winchester should be

¶ Godwin, (De Præsul. p. 257.) There is as much authority for this assertion as there is for that of Scutus being a student at Oxford. Nor is the succeeding remark more just, that Denulf was a swineherd at Athelney; for Alfred did not retire thither till the year 878, and in 879 Denulf was made bishop of Winchester. See Wharton's Ang. Sac. I. 1. 8. The report is indeed mentioned, with some misgivings, by Florence of Worcester, who saw in all probability that it could not be reconciled in its original state with the course of Alfred's history, for he has suppressed the name of the place Athelney, where Alfred is said to have met him, and states merely that he met him in a wood feeding swine: "in silvam prædego" "easu suis paucemem offer" "dit." Flor. Wigorn. an. 87. Indeed this entire period of Alfred's reign is involved in great confusion, as might be expected. Two distinct classes of legends respecting the life of this monarch remain to us; the one has been followed by Ascer, the Saxon Chronicler, Florence of Worcester, and Symeon of Durham; the other by Ingulph, Malmesbury, Matthew of Westminster. Each has little in common with the other.

¶ Malmsh. de Gest. Pict. cunct. f. 138.

¶ See Mr. Isaacson's Chronology, (p. 423, ed. 1633.)

ashamed of him; and for ought I know, Denulf ^{A. D. 887.} might be as good a bishop as Dunstan, of whom the ^{17 Alfredi.} monks of Winchester so boast, both without cause and measure.

42. Councils (except councils of war) were very rare in this age. The first I find a solemn one, celebrated by king Alfred^s; the place not expressed, but the canons therein fairly transmitted to posterity. ^{The preface to the canons made by king Alfred.} The preface of these canons is very remarkable, consisting of three parts^t.

i. The ten commandments translated into Saxon, as being the basis and foundation of all human laws.

ii. Several pieces of chapters in Exodus, being the breviate of the judicial law of the Jews; which though in the latitude thereof calculated only for the Jewish commonwealth, yet the moral equity therein obligeth all Christians.

iii. The fifteenth chapter of the Acts, containing the council of Jerusalem, as being a divine precedent or warrant for Christians to convene together, and conclude orders for regulating men's conversations.

It is remarkable, that in the aforesaid ten commandments, as exemplified in this council of Alfred, the second commandment is wholly expunged; image-worship beginning then to grow common in the world, and the clergy, who gained thereby (hating the second commandment on the same account as Ahab did Micaiah^u, because it ever prophe-

^s [This was apparently no council at all; nor were these the canons of any council; but merely a collection by the king of such laws, selected from those of his predecessors, as appeared to him most deserving of distinction. This is clear from the conclusion of them.]

^t Spelman's Conc. I. 354
[= 186. Wilkins, I. 186.]

^u Kings xxii. 8.

A. D. 887. sied evil unto them,) dashed it out of the Decalogue.

¹⁷ Alfredi.

The worst is, when this was wanting, the Decalogue was but an enneologue; and therefore to preserve the number of ten, the papists generally cleave the last commandment into two: but in Alfred's preface this is made the tenth and last commandment. — Thus "shalt not worship gods of gold and silver." Which, as it comes in out of its proper place, (and why should not God's order be observed, as well as his number, in the commandments?) so it is defectively rendered nothing so full against graven-images, as God pronounced it. The canons made in this council fall under a threefold consideration. Some relate only to the commonwealth, and by us may properly be forborne. Others concern only monks and friars (a sixth finger, and no necessary member of the church,) and, as actio moritur cum persona, so with the extirpation of those convents, those canons may seem to expire.

A. D. 889.

A general contribution to Rome and Jerusalem.

43. Plegmund, an eremite in the isle of Chær, (now called Plegmundsham,) tutor to king Alfred, was by him preferred to be archbishop of Canterbury, then a miserable place, as hardly recovered from the late sacking of the Danes. By the king's command, he called the clergy of England together, and made a collection of alms, to be sent to Rome and Jerusalem¹⁸; and Athelmi, archbishop of York, was employed in the journey, going personally to the aforesaid places to see the contribution there faithfully delivered and equally distributed.

¹⁸ According to Mat. Westmon in an SS., whose authority is worth very little. He has probably confounded this with another assembly held under king Edward. See Malmesb. f. 26. Ethelmaus was bish. of Winchester, not archbishop of York.)

44. About the end of this century died worthy ^{A. D. 901.} ₂₁ Alfredi. king Alfred, remarkable to posterity on many accounts, whereof this not the least; that he turned ^{Death of} _{king Al-} _{fred.} David's Psalms into English; so that a royal text met with a royal translator. He left his crown to Edward his son, commonly called the elder, far inferior to his father in skill in, but not so much in his love to good literature. Indeed he had an excellent tutor, Asserius Menevensis, archbishop of St. David's, the faithful writer of his father's actions, supposed by some bishop of Sherborn^w, which is denied by others^x, (though one of the same name was some years before,) as inconsistent with chronology.

45. As for the principal clergymen extant at this time, we take special notice of two: the one, Ber- ^{Weak} _{guardians} _{God wot.} thulf bishop of Winchester^y, made one of the guardians of the realm against the incursion of the Danes; the other, Ealheard bishop of Dorchester, advanced also into the same employment. But alas! what weak guardians were these to defend the land, which could not secure their own sees! And in what capacity, save in prayers and tears, were they able to make any resistance? for now the Danes not only assailed the skirts and outsides of the land, but also made

^w [See Wise in his edition of Asser. If this Asser be the same as the author of Alfred's life, he was indisputably bishop of Sherborn. "Habebat (Alfredus) ex sancto Dewi Asserionem quendam scientia non ignobili instructum quem Schireburniae fuit episcopus." pum. Malmsb. 24, b. The authenticity of Asser's narrative is involved in great difficulty. In its present state it is evidently much interpolated.

^x Usher de Brit. Eccles. primord. p. 1177=p. 544.

^y [The sole authority for this statement is Mat. Westmin. (in an. 897.), who has carelessly transcribed from Florentius Wigorn. or the Saxon Chronicle. By comparing these writers, in the year 897, the reader will easily see the origin of the error. There was no bishop of Winchester of the name of Berthulf.]

A.D. 901. inroads many miles into the continent thereof. ²¹ Alfred. ¹¹ so much that Winchester lay void six, and Sherburn seven years; such the pagan fury, that none durst offer to undertake those places.

The woful estate of the English.

46. True it is, the English oftentimes in battle got the advantage of them; when the pagan Danes being conquered, had but one way to shift for themselves, namely, to counterfeit themselves Christians, and embrace baptism; but no sooner had they got power again into their hands, but that they turning apostates were ten times more cruel than ever before. Thus successively was the land affected with sickness, recovery, and relapses; the people's condition being so much the more disconsolate, because promising a continuance of happiness to themselves upon their victories, they were on their overthrows remanded to the same, if not a worse condition.

The commendable temper of king Alfred and king Edward.

47. It is strange to observe the alternations of success between the English and Danes, how exactly they took their turns; God using them to hold up one another, whilst he justly beat both. Meantime commendable the temper of late king Alfred and present king Edward; it being true of each of them,

Si modo victus erat, ad crastina bella parabat;

Si modo vicit erat, ad crastina bella timebat;

If that it happ'd that conquered was he,

Next day to fight he quickly did prepare,

But if he chanc'd the conqueror to be,

Next day to fight he wisely did beware.

But these things we leave to the historians of the state to prosecute, and confine ourselves only to matters of ecclesiastical cognizance.

²¹ These verses are part of Wharton's Ang. Sacr. I. 3:8 a longer poem. See Huntington. Both copies vary slightly from don, f. 222, and Rudborne, in the lines in the text.)

THE TENTH CENTURY.

JACOBO LANGHAM, ARMIGERO, AMPLISSIMI
SENATORIS LONDINENSIS PRIMOGENITO ^a.

Decimam hanc Centuriam tibi dedicandam curavi, quod numerus denarius semper aliquid augustum sonet. Sic in Papicolarum globulis, quibus preculas suas numerant, decimus (ut decurio) aliis magnitudine præstat.

At dices, centuria hæc inter ecclesiasticos audit infelix, cum sua tantum obscuritate sit illustris. Quid tibi igitur, felicissimo viro, cui latum ingenium, lauta hæreditas, cum infelici seculo?

Verbo expidiam. Volui nomen tuum historiæ meæ hic prætendi, ut instar phosphori, lectores in hac tenebrosa atate oberrantes splendoris sui radiis dirigat.

Percurras, quæso, in sequentes paginas nihil scientiæ, aliquid voluptatis tibi allaturas. Quo cum nemo sit in ipsis elegantiarum apicibus Latinior, probe scio, te perquam suaviter risurum, cum Diploma Edvardinum, nimia barbarie scatens, perlegeris.

T this time there was a great dearth of ^{A.D. 904.} bishops in the land, which lasted for ⁴ ^{Edvardi senioria.} seven years, (as long as the famine in ^{England} ^{interdicted} ^{by the pope} ^{for want of} Egypt,) during which time there was ^{bis} no bishop in all the west parts of Eng- ^{bisho_{pe}} land. Pope Formosus was foully offended hereat,

^a [Arms. This coat is erroneously given as three horses, heads couped, bridled, and bitted, two and one. The arms, as borne by James Langham, esq. were, argent a chevron sable, between three bears' heads couped of the second, muzzled or. Crest, a bear's head erased, sable. This James (afterwards sir James) Langham was the second baronet of that family, and ancestor to its present representative. He was seated at Cotesbrook, Northants, of which county he was high-sheriff in 1664. He was thrice married, his first wife being Mary, daughter of sir Edward Alston, his second Elizabeth, daughter of Ferdinando Hastings, earl of Huntingdon, and his third, who survived him, Penelope, daughter of John Holles, earl of Clare. His father, sir John Langham, was an alderman and sheriff of London 18th Car. I. (1642.), and was created a baronet 7th June, 1660. B.]

A.D. 904. and thereupon, cum magna iracundia et detractione^a _{4 Edwardi senioria.} “with much passion and piety,” by his curse and excommunication, interdicted king, kingdom, and all the subjects therein. We cannot but gaze at the novelty of this act, (as we conceive a leading case in this kind,) whilst the skilful in the canon law can give an account of the equity of the pope’s proceedings, why all should suffer for some, the guilty with the guilty, and have the word and sacraments taken from them for the want of bishops in other places: otherwise, the punishment seemeth unjust in the rigid justice thereof, and (if not heavier) larger than the offence, and beareth no proportion with common equity, Christian charity, and God’s proceedings, who saith, The soul that sinneth, it shall die.

The character of those kings on whom the pope most improved himself.

2. Notwithstanding, this excommunicating of king Edward by the pope is highly urged by Parsons^b, to prove the pope’s power in England over princes, according to his constant solecism clean through the tenure of his book, to reason a facto ad ius, arguing from the pope’s barely doing it, that he may justly do it. We deny not but that in this age active and ambitious popes mightily improved their power upon five sorts of princes. First, on such as were lazy and voluptuous; who, on condition they might enjoy their sports and delights for the present, care not for their posterity. Secondly, on such as were openly vicious, and so obnoxious to censure; who would part with any thing, out of the apprehension of their guiltiness. Thirdly, on such as were tender and easy-natured; who gave, not so much out of bounty to give, as out of bashfulness to deny the

^a Atelai Cant. in Regist. king, as below?
Priorat Eccles. Cant. f. 3. b. ^b In his answer to the last (Quoted in Spelman and Wil. Coke’s Report, c. 6. p. 156.

pope's importunity. Fourthly, on those of a timorous spirit; who were affrighted with their own fancies of the pope's terribleness, and being captivated unto him by their own fear, they ransomed themselves at what price he pleased. Lastly, on pious princes; whose blind zeal and misled devotion thought nothing too precious for him: in which form we rank this Edward the elder, then king of England. And it is worth our observing, that in point of power and profit, what the popes once get, they ever hold, being as good at keeping as catching; so that what one got by encroaching, his successor prescribed that encroachment for a title, which whether it will hold good in matter of right, it is not for an historian to dispute.

3. But to return to our story. We are glad to see Malmsbury so merry, who calleth this passage of the pope's interdicting England, jocundum memoratu^c, "pleasant to be reported," because it ended so well. For Plegmund archbishop of Canterbury posted to Rome, bringing with him honorifica munera, (such ushers will make one way through the thickest crowd to the pope's presence,) informing his holiness that Edward king of England, in a late-summoned synod, had founded some new, and supplied all old vacant bishoprics. Pacified herewith, the pope turned his curse into a blessing, and ratified their elections. The worst is, a learned pen tells me, that in this story there is an inextricable error in point of chronology^d, which will not suffer pope Formosus and this king Edward the elder to meet together^e.

^c [De Gestis Regum, f. 26.] Saxon Chronicle nor Florence

^d Spelman's Concil. I. p. 389=[Wilkins, I. 201.] of Worcester notice this inter-

^e [Because Formosus died in the year 896. Neither the

A. D. 904. And Baronius makes the mistake worse by endeavouring to mend it. I have so much wariness as not to enter into that labyrinth, out of which I cannot return; but leave the doubt to the pope's datary to clear, proper to him, as versed in such matters. The same pen informs me^c, that the sole way to reconcile the difference is, to read pope Leo the Fifth instead of pope Formosus: which for quietness I am content to do, the rather because such a railing curse best beseems the mouth of a lion.

Varant bis.
shopries supplied, and new erected.

4. Hear now the names of the seven bishops which Plegmund consecrated in one day: a great day's work, and a good one, if all were fit for the function. Frithestan bishop of Winchester, a learned and holy man, Werstan of Sherborn, Cenulf of Dorchester, Beornege of Selsey, Ethelm of Wells, Eadulf of Crediton in Devon, and Ethelstan in Cornwall of St. Petrock's^d. These three last western bishopries were in this council newly erected. But St. Petrock's had never long any settled seat, being much in motion, translated from Bodmin in Cornwall (upon the wasting of it by the Danes) to St. German's in the same county, and afterwards united to Crediton in Devonshire. This bishoprie was founded principally for the reduction of the rebellious Cornish to the Romish rites; who as they used the language, & they imitated the lives and doctrine of the ancient Britons, neither hitherto nor long after submitting themselves to the see apostolic.

A. D. 906. 5. A synod was called at Intingford^e, where Ed-
King Ed.

^c Ibidem.

^d The locality of this place is now unknown. But probably it was within or near Huntingdonshire.)

^e See Malmesb. f. 141. Flor. is now unknown. But probably it was within or near Huntingdonshire.)

ward the Elder, and Guthrun king of the Danes, in A.D. 906. that part of England which formerly belonged to the ⁶ Edwardi senioris. East-Angles, only confirmed the same ecclesiastical ^{ward in a new synod confirms his father's constitutions.} constitutions which Alured, Edward's father, with the said Guthrun, had made before^h. Here the curious palates of our age will complain of crambe, that two kings, with their clergy, should meet together only actum agere, to do what was done to their hands. But whilst some count all councils idle which do not add or alter, others will commend their discretion who can discern what is well ordered ~~already~~, approve their policy in enjoining such things unto others, and principally praise their piety for practising them in themselves. And whosoever looks abroad into the world with a judicious eye, will soon see that there is not so much need of new laws, (the multitude whereof rather cumbers men's memories than quickens their practice), as an absolute necessity to enforce old laws, with a new and vigorous execution of them.

6. And now king Edward, remembering the pious A.D. 915. example of his father Alfred in founding of Oxford, ^{Cambridge} university began to repair and restore the university of Cam- ^{repaired by king Edward.} bridge. For the Danes, who made all the sea-coasts of England their haunt, and kept the kingdom of the East-Angles for their home, had banished all learning from that place; Apollo's harp being silenced by Mars his drum: till this king's bounty brought learning back again thither, as by his following charter may appear.

“ In nomine D. Jesu Christi. Ego Edwardus, Dei “ gratia, rex Anglorum, divino compulsus amore,

^h Lambard in his Saxon Spelman, ib. p. 390. [Wilkins, Laws. [p. 38. ed. 1644] and I. 202.]

A.D. 915. "praecepto Joannis, apostolicæ sedis episcopi, ac 15 Edvardi senioris. " Pleigmundi Cantuar. archiepisc. consilio, omnium
 " sacerdotum et principum mear dominationis, uni-
 " versa et singula privilegia, doctoribus et scholaribus
 " Cantabrigie, nec non servientibus eorumdem, tali
 " ab olim digna indesinenter mater philosophiar. et
 " reperitur in presenti fons clerimoniar. a me data,
 " seu ab antecessoribus meis quomodo libet concessa.
 " stabili jure grata et rata decerno durare, quandom
 " vertigo poli circa terras atque aquora æthereæ sydes
 " rum justo moderamine volvet. Datum in Gran-
 " cestria, anno ab incarnatione D. 915. venerabilis
 " fratri Frithstano, civitatis scholarium Cantabrig.
 " cancellario, et doctori per suum. &c."

The credit of this charter is questioned by some, because of the barbarous style thereof; as if a university were disgraced with honourable privileges granted unto it in base Latin. But know, that age was so poor in learning, it could not go to the use of good language. Who can look to find a fair face in the hottest parts of Ethiopia! Those times were ignorant: and as it is observed of the country-people born at the village of Carlton in Leicestershire, that they have all (proceeding from some secret cause in their soil or water) a strange uncouth wharling in their speech, so it was proper to the persons writing in this age to have a harsh, unpleasant, grating style, (and so much the sourer to critical ears, the

¹ Charta extat in MS. codice qui Cantabrigiæ est in Aula Clarensi, epi dem meum Thos. Rudburn, nec non Joh. Ross. p. 66, ed. Hearne, 1716. Dr. Heylyn objects to the authenticity of this charter, upon the ground that the words doctor and chancellor were not at that time used in the sense here attributed to them. Ex Hist. p. 43. See The Appar. &c. part II. p. 11, and part II. Spelman in his Gilmore. ² Camden's Brit. in Leicestershire, p. 317.

more it is sweetened with an affected rhythm,) ^{A.D. 915.} though a blemish, yet a badge of their genuine deeds ¹⁵ ^{Edwardi senioris.} which were passed in those times¹.

7. Hear also what John Rosse, an excellent anti-^{The testimony of John Rosse concerning king Edward's repairing of Cambridge.} quary, furnished by king Edward the Fourth with privacy and pension to collect the monuments of this land, allegeth to this purpose. Who being bred in Oxford, and having written a book in confutation of those which deduce the foundation of this university from Cantaber, may be presumed will allow Cambridge no more than what in right is due unto her^m. He speaking of king Edward the elder, out of an ancient table and chronicle of Hyde-abbey by Winchester, which himself by the favour of the abbot perused, reporteth of the restoration of decayed Cambridge at this time, in manner as followeth.

Propterea ad clerimoniam augmentandam, sicut pater suus Oxoniā, sic ipse ab antiquo cum ceteris studiis generalibus suspensam, desolatam, et destructam Cantabrigiam, iterum ad pri- man gloriam erexit; necnon ibi aulas studentium, et doctorum magistrorumque cathedras et sedilia, ut dilectissimus cleri nutritor, amator et defensor, suis sumptibus erigi et fabricari præcepit. Ab Oxonia namque universitate, quam pater

“Therefore for the augmentation of clerklike learning, as his father had done to Oxford, so he again raised up Cambridge to her first glory, which for a long time, with other general schools, had been suspended, desolate, and destroyed: as also, like a most loving nourisher of the clergy, he commanded that halls for students, chairs and seats of doctors and masters, should there be erected, and built on his own proper charges: for he called from Oxford university, which his noble father

¹ [This barbarous and grotesque style was introduced into our charters at the time of king Alfred, and imported from Byzantium, according to the opinion of J. M. Kemble, esq.

Traces of it however may be seen at an earlier period. See Malmesb. Vita Aldhelmi, p. 9, 10, &c.]

^m Bale, Cent. VIII. §. 53.

A. D. 915. suus nobilis rex [Alfredus] 15 Edvardi exerat, magistros artium senioria. quas liberales vocamus, pariterque in sacra theologia doctores advocavit, ibique ad legendum formaliter, et docendum invitavit^m. " the king had erected, masters " of those arts which we call " liberal, together with doctors in " holy divinity, and invited them " there formally to read and " teach."

Cambridge represented in a three-fold estate. 8. Have we here Cambridge presented in a three-fold condition. First, what she had been long before king Edward's time; fairly flourishing with learning. Secondly, in what case he found her; desolate and decayed. Then the cup of Cambridge was at the bottom, her breasts dry, and her sun in an eclipse. She was, saith Rosse, suspended, not by the power of any pope's keys, as the word may import, but by the force of pagan swords, who here interrupted the exercise of acts and public lectures; as in Spain, Germany, and other foreign parts, places appointed for learning, had shared in the like calamity. Thirdly, in what condition Edward left her; under whom, as under the father of the act, Cambridge itself did then commence and take a new degree. Happy this Edward, who like a wealthy landlord, had two nurseries of choice fruit; so that if the one by any accident chanced to fail, he could supply it from the other without being beholden to his neighbours. This was the love betwixt the two sisters; what either had, neither could want, and Oxford, which lent now, borrowed another time, as in due place shall appear. If the same authorⁿ elsewhere calleth this king Edward founder of Cambridge, it is by an easy and obvious error, because a total repairer doth amount to a partial founder. Nor doth Cambridge regret thereat; seeing grateful expressions, which had rather transgress in the excess than the defect, may in courtesy call their mender their maker.

^m [John Rossus, Hist. Regum Anglie, p. 67, ed. Hearne. This is merely a verbed quotation from Rudburn by John Ross. He does not quote the passage which he saw in the Chronicle at Hyde.] ⁿ In his Catalogue of the Earls of Warwick (Capab.

9. Æthelstan his son succeeded king Edward, being much devoted to St. John of Beverley; on whose church he bestowed a freed-stool, with large privileges belonging thereunto. Many councils were kept in this king's reign, at Exeter, Feversham, Thunderfield, and London, (all of them of uncertain date.) But one held at Greatlea is of greatest account for the laws therein enacted; the principal here ensuing.

i. "That the king's officers should truly pay tithes out of his demesnes, as well of his quick cattle, as dead commodities.

ii. "That cyriesceat (that is, firstfruits of seeds) be duly paid to God in his church^o.

^o [Brompton, p. 838. Wilkins' Concil. I. 205. I can find notice of no other councils during this reign except this one.]

^p [The word is nothing more than the Saxon cyriscseat, church-scot. Though some writers translate it, as though seat was a corruption for sæd, giving it the same sense with our author. See Spelman's Gloss. upon this word; where the arguments for this latter opinion do not appear conclusive.

These dues were probably omitted in the troubles which happened shortly after by the cruelty of the Danes, and were restored by Canute upon his return from his pilgrimage to Rome. A passage in this king's letter, which he addressed upon this occasion to his English subjects, gives a very clear account of them. "Nunc igitur præcipio omnes meos episcopos et regni præpositos—quatenus faciatis ut antequam ego Angliam veniam omnia debita quæ Deo secundum legem antiquam (that is, the laws of Athelstan) debemus, sint persoluta. Scilicet eleemosinæ pro aratris, et decimæ animalium ipsius anni procreatōrum, et denarii quos Romæ ad S. Petrum debemus, sive

A.D. 928. iii. "That the king's officers maintain one poor
5 Athel-
stan. " body in the king's villages; and in case none be " found therein, fetch him from other places."

(Christ saith, *The poor you have always with you. The church in general is well stocked with them, though some particular parish may want such as are in want. If any would know the bill of fare allowed these poor people. It was monthly a measure of meal, una perna, a gammon of bacon, a ram worth a groat, four cheeses, and thirty pence on Easter Wednesday to buy them clothes.*)

iv. "That moniers wilfully corrupting the coin,
" and found guilty, have their hands cut off, and
" nailed to the mint-house."

(Every borough was allowed one mint therein: but besides these; Hastings one, Chichester one, Shaftesbury two, Wareham two, Exeter two, Hampton two, Lewes two, Rochester three [two for the king and one for the bishop], Winchester six, Canterbury seven, (viz. for the king four for the archbishop two, for the abbot one), London eight. Most of these places were anciently in the West-Saxon kingdom: to whom the English monarchs were most favourable in doubling their privilege of coining, but single in other places of greater capacity.)

v. "That such who were tried by ordeal, should
" ceremoniously be prepared thereunto with the " solemn manner of managing that trial."

"ex urbibus sive ex villis, et
" mediante Augusto decimae
" frugum, et in festivitate S.
" Martini primitiae seminum
" ad ecclesiam sub eius par-
" rochia quisque deget, quae
" Anglice Cirencester nominan-
" tur." Flor. Wigorn. a. 1031
See sir H. Ellis Introd. to Domesday, I. 3. .

It should be observed that Fuller has followed Brompton's Latin copy of these canons, and not the Saxon. The Latin copy is more full than the Saxon, and varies considerably in other points: that is the third canon of the Saxon version it is merely, " and clothing for twelve months, " every year," no stipulation of 3 d. being paid on the third day of Easter, as in the Latin copies, and the drenching of witches in the eighth is omitted in the Saxon version."

vi. "That no buying or selling be on the Lord's ^{A.D. 928.}
"day."
^{5 Athel-}
^{stan.}

(This took not full effect for many years after; for Henry the First granted to Battel-abbey a market to be kept on that day, lately (at the motion of Anthony marquis Montacute) by act of parliament removed to another day ^{q.})

vii. "That one convicted of perjury shall be trusted "no more on his oath, nor be buried in holy earth, "except restored by the bishop on his penance."

viii. "That witches, confessing themselves to have "killed any, be put to death."

(Such as were suspected, and denied the fact, might be tried by ordeal; which was done either by fire, whereof hereafter, or by water. Of the latter, mergatur una ulna et dimidia in fune, which I thus understand; Let the party be tied to a rope, and drenched an ell and a half above his own height. And this is the first footstep we find of swimming of witches; for which no law, save custom, at this day: and that whether just in itself, and satisfactory, (as a means proportionable for the discovery of the truth,) is not my work to determine.)

Whosoever desires to have more exact information of this council, may repair to sir Henry Spelman, where he may receive plentiful satisfaction^r.

10. Only I must not omit one passage in this ^{Dignities and degrees amongst the Saxons.} council, acquainting us with the heraldry of that age, and the distances and degrees of persons, collected from their weers or weer-gilds, that is, taxes and valuations; it being truly to be said in that age,

Quantum quisque sua nummorum servat in arca,
Tantum habet et fidei—

Every one's testimony in law-cases in courts was credited according to his wealth.

^q Camden's Brit. in Sussex, [p. 226.]

^r In his Concil. I. 396. et sequentibus. [Wilkins, I. 205.]

A. D. 928. ^{3 Athel-}
^{stan.} i. Ceorles, whence our northern word carles, and common word churles, being country clowns, whose weergild was two hundred shillings, or ten pounds: the same with villanes, who held land in villanage of others. These, if by blessing on their industry they rose so high as to have five hides of land of their own, with a place in the king's court, and some other privileges, now hardly to be understood, were advanced to be thanes.

ii. The weergild, or value of a thane, was six times as much as a churle or a villane, namely, twelve times a hundred shillings, therefore termed a twelve hind-man; whose oath in law was equivalent to six oaths of churles or villanes; as a shilling passing in payment countervaleth six twopences. Note, that if a masseer or merchant pass the great sea thence, (understand the Mediterranean, not the narrow ~~sea~~ betwixt us and France,) and not in the notion of a servant, but on his own account, he then was dignified with the reputation of a thane. These thanes were of two sorts: meset-thanes, priests qualified to say mass; and worrould-thanes, that is, secular or temporal thanes.

iii. Of the first, if a scholar made such proficiency in his studies that he took holy orders, he was reverently respected, and (though not valued as a worrould-thane in rates and taxes) amends were to be made for any wrongs done unto him equal to a thane; and in case he should be killed, the penalty thereof was the higher, the more orders the person had taken. Observe by the way, so far as we can understand the Saxon laws, that manslaughter was not then punished with death, but might be redeemed by the proportionable payment of a sum of money, according to the quality of the person slain ; ^{A.D. 928.} part thereof payable to the king, part to his kindred, ^{5 Athel-} _{stan.} part to the country thereabouts^s.

But the further prosecution hereof, where the footsteps are almost outworn with time, we leave to more expert antiquaries ; who will tell you, that alderman in that age was equal to our modern earl, who with bishops were of the same valuation : also that comes in that age sounded as much as duke in ours, archbishops going along with them in all considerable equipage.

11. Now began St. Dunstan^t to appear in court, ^{A.D. 933.} born at Glassenbury of noble parentage, (as almost ^{Dunstan} his first what saint in this age was not honourably extracted?) ^{coming into} _{the court.} nephew both to Elphegus bishop of Winchester, and ^{favour at} Ethelred archbishop of Canterbury, yea kinsman remote to king Æthelstan himself : and being thus highly related, he could not miss of preferment.

^s [On this subject see Brompton's Chronicle, p. 845. ed. Twysden.]

^t [This account of St. Dunstan is taken principally from bishop Parker's Antiq. Eccl. Brit. p. 119 sq. See also a life of St. Dunstan written by Osbern a monk of Canterbury, published in Wharton's Ang. Sacra, II. p. 88, and another by Eadmer, monk and prior of Canterbury, the friend and biographer of St. Anselm, ibid. p. 211.]

Osbern flourished in the eleventh century. But his account of St. Dunstan was derived principally from a Saxon version of a Latin life of Dunstan, written probably but very shortly after Dunstan's death, which escaped the conflagration in 1070, in which many of the records of the church of Canterbury were consumed. (Osb. vit. Dunst. p. 89.) It is stuffed with the most improbable and gross falsehoods, but yet is curious in many particulars, as the composition of one who had conversed with St. Dunstan, and who had visited the scenes of which he speaks.

Even at an earlier period than this a life of St. Dunstan was written by Adalardus, a monk of Bath, and Bridferth, a monk of Ramsey ; the latter of which has been published in the Acta SS. 19 Maii, tom. IV. p. 345.]

A.D. 933. His eminencies were painting and graving. (two qualities disposing him to be very useful for saint-worshipping, either for pictures or images,) an excellent musician, (preaching in those days could not be heard for singing in churches,) and an admirable worker in brass and iron¹. These accomplishments commended him at court to be acceptable to company; and for some time he continued with the king in great reputation.

A.D. 935. 12. But it is given to that bowle which lies next to the mark, to have most take aim to remove it. Eminency occasions envy, which made Dunstan's enemies endeavour to depress him. He is accused to the king for a magician, and upon that account banished the court². It was brought as evidence ▼ [Osbern, ib. p. 93. It seems likely that Dunstan excelled his contemporaries not only in those arts and sciences which were more usually cultivated in his time, such as music and painting, but likewise in the natural sciences, which were probably very little known. See Osbern, p. 93. That he should be an excellent worker in gold, silver, brass, and iron, they who have admired the exquisite productions of our forefathers will not wonder. Modern times have produced nothing in architecture or the ornamental arts equal to the taste of those days, (called vainly enough) the dark ages; and these works were under the direction of the ecclesiastics. To the ecclesiastics of those dark ages England owes most of what is excellent in her civil institutions

—whatever is noble in her buildings—the preservation of learning, and the cultivation of the arts.]

▼ [Osbern, p. 94. 95. There is some difficulty in reconciling the accounts of St Dunstan with the year of his birth as given by Osbern. For according to this writer he was born in the first year of king Ethelstan, that is, A.D. 924. But Ethelstan died when Dunstan was only seventeen in the year 941, and Athelredus in the year 928. Consequently the account of St Dunstan's appearance at Athelstan's court, and the subsequent narrative of his banishment is a fiction. Osbern is incorrect as to the date of St Dunstan's birth. How strange it is that these difficulties have not been noticed by Malmesbury.] against him, that he made his harp not only to have ^{A.D. 935.} motion, but make music of itself, which no white art ¹² Athelstani. could perform.

St. Dunstan's harp fast by the wall
Upon a pin did hang-a ;
The harp itself, with lie and all,
Untouch't by hand did twang-a.

For our part, let Dunstan's harp hang there still, on a double suspicion twisted together; first, whether this story thereof were true or false: secondly, if true, whether done by magic or miracle. Sure I am, as good a harper, and a better saint than Dunstan was, hath no such miracle reported of him, even David himself: who with his harp praised God, pleased men, frightened devils^x; yet took pains with his own right hand to play^y, not lazily commanding music by miracle to be made on his instrument.

13. Banished from court, Dunstan returns to Glas- ^{A.D. 937.} senbury, and there falls a puffing and blowing in his <sup>He retires unto his cell-prison at Glassen-
bury.</sup> forge. Here he made himself a cell, or rather a little-ease, being but four feet long, two and a half broad, (enough to cripple his joints with the cramp, who could not lie along therein,) whilst the height thereof was according to the stature of a man^z. Wisely and virtuously he would not confine himself upwards, that the scantness of the earthly dimensions in his cell (breadth and length) might be enlarged in the height thereof, and liberty left for the ascending of his meditations. But it matters not how little ^x 1 Sam. xvi. 23.

it is clear that the saint did

^y Psalm cxxxvii. 5.

“ lie along therein.” The cell

^z [Osbern, who had seen it, has given a description of this cell in his Life of St. Dunstan, p. 96. From the same writer indeed was only five feet long, and Dunstan was very diminutive.]

A.D. 937. the prison be, if a man, with Dunstan, be his own
 14. ^{Abel-} jailer, to go in and out at pleasure. Leave we him stani. — at the furnace in smithery work, (excelling Alexander the coppersmith therein,) whilst we find such monk as wrote his life at another forge, whence they counted many impudent miracles pretended done by Dunstan, and this among the rest.

A.D. 938. 14. Dunstan was in his vocation making some Takes a devil by nose. iron trinkets, when a Proteus-devil appeared unto him, changing into shapes, but fixing himself at last into the form of a fair woman^a. Strange, that Satan (so subtile in making his temptations more taking should prefer this form; belike shrewdly guessing at Dunstan's temper, that a fair woman might work upon him, and Vulcan might love a Venus. Dunstan perceiving it, plucked his tongs glowing hot out of the fire, and with them kept him (or her shall I say?) there a long time by the nose roaring and torturing, till at last he brake loose, by what accident it is not told unto us.

This false miracle canvassed. 15. I have better employment than to spend precious time in confuting such follies; but give me leave to admire at these new arms against Satan.
Take the shield of faith, (saith the apostle,) wherewith ye may quench all the fiery darts of the wicked^b. Dunstan found a new way by himself with fiery tongs to do the deed. But let us a little examine this miracle. The Devil himself we know is a spirit, and so impatible of material fire. Now if it were a real body he assumed, the snake could slip off his skin at pleasure, and not be tied to it, much less tormented with it. Besides, did Dunstan willingly or unwillingly

^a [Osbern, p. 49.]

^b Eph. vi. 16.

ingly let the Devil go? If willingly, mercy to so A.D. 938.
malicious an enemy (incapable of being amended) ¹⁵ Athelstanī.
was cruelty to himself: if unwillingly, was it Dunstan's fire or his faith that failed him, that he could hold out against him no longer? But away with all suspicions and queries: none need to doubt of the truth thereof, finding it in a sign painted in Fleet-street near Temple-bar.

16. During Dunstan's abode in his cell, he had to ^{Ælfgiva} his great comfort and contentment the company of a ^{Dunstan's} good lady, ^{bountiful} Ælfgiva by name, living fast by^c. No preacher but Dunstan would please her, being so ravished with his society, that she would needs build a little cell for herself hard by him. In process of time this lady died, and by her last will left Christ to be the heir, and Dunstan the executor of her estate. Enabled with the accession thereof, joined to his paternal possessions, which were very great,
and now fallen into his hands, Dunstan erected the abbey of Glassenbury, and became himself first abbot thereof; a title till his time unknown in England^d.

^c [Osbern, p. 97. n. That scandal in the early church was but too frequent at this time in England. William of Malmesbury mentions a similar instance in the life of Aldhelm, p. 13. See also Wharton's note in the Anglia Sacra, II. p. 97.]

^d [Osbern, p. 100. In his Appeal of Injured Innocence, Fuller says, "I request such as have my Church-History to delete these words; for I profess I know not by what casualty these words crept

" into my book, contrary to
" my intent."

This is an instance in which second thoughts are not best. Nor would Fuller have made this observation, had he referred to the sources from which he probably derived the history of St. Dunstan. The passage from which he gathered his information occurs in Osbern's life of that saint, and is as follows: "Ea tempestate (that is, the time here noticed by Fuller,) Glastonia regalibus stipendiis addicta, monastice religionis penitus

A.D. 939.
16 Athel-
stani.

He built also and endowed many other monasteries, filling them with Benedictine monks, who began now to swarm in England, more than maggots in a hot May, so incredible was their increase.

A.D. 940.
Recalled to court, and rebanished thence.

17. After the death of king Ethelstan, Dunstan was recalled to court in the reign of king Edmund, Ethelstan's brother, and flourished for a time in great favour. But who would build on the brittle bottom of princes' love? Soon after he falls into the king's disfavour; the old crime, of being a magician (and a wanton with women to boot) being laid to his charge. Surely Dunstan by looking on his own furnace might learn thence there was no smoke but some fire; either he was dishonest or undiscrēt, which gave the groundwork to their general suspicion. Hereupon he is rebanished the court, and returned to his desired cell at Glastenbury; but

"ignara. Nondum enim in
"Anglia communis ratio vita
"colebatur; non usus deser-
"rendi proprias voluntates ho-
"minibus affectabatur. Abbas
"nomen et quipiam audierat.
"Conventus monachorum non
"satis quipiam viderat." Angl.
Saer. II. 91. Bridferth also in his life of St. Dunstan styles him, primus Abbas Angliae natura. Ib. p. 121.

Those religious houses which Dunstan and Edgar turned into monastic institutions were originally convents for the secular or married clergy, similar to the collegiate churches of the present day, and restricted pretty strictly by the same rules. The monastic life, though at this time not altogether unknown, was unusual in England

For as the same writer informs us, sometimes individuals, sometimes a small company, who embraced the resolution of leading solitary lives, quitted their country, and spent their lives in seclusion, whenever an opportunity offered itself. This custom prevailed to a great extent in Ireland, many of the most learned and religious men of that nation left their country, and settled at Glastenbury, a place suitable to such a design, as we read from the busy labours of men and consecrated by the ecclesiastical labours of their renowned saint St. Patrick.

See Fer. Wigen, and the Saxon Chronicle, 26 and Malmesb. 1. 29.

within three days was solemnly brought back again ^{A. D. 941.}
to court, if the ensuing story may be believed.^{e.} ^{1 Edmundi.}

18. King Edmund was in an eager pursuit of a buck, on the top of a steep rock, whence no descent but destruction^{f.} Down falls the deer, and dogs after him, and are dashed to pieces. The king follows in full speed on an unruly horse, whom he could not rein, and is on the brink of the precipice: yet his prayers prove swifter than his horse, he but ran, whilst they did fly to heaven. He is sensible of his sin in banishing Dunstan, confesseth it with sorrow, vows amendment, promiseth to restore and prefer him. Instantly the horse stops in his full career, and his rider is wonderfully preserved.

19. Thus far a strong faith may believe of the story: but it must be a wild one which gives credit to the remainder. Cerrus et canes reviviscunt^{g.}, saith the impudent monk, “the deer and dogs revive “again.” I remember not in scripture that God ever revived a brute beast; partly because such mean subjects are beneath the majesty of a miracle, and partly because (as the apostle saith) brute beasts are made to be taken and destroyed^{h.} Well then might the monk have knocked off when he had done well, in saving the man and horse, and might have left the dogs and deer to have remained dead on the place; the deer especially, were it but to make venison pasties, to feast the courtiers at the solemnizing of their lord and master’s so miraculous deliverance.

^e [Yet Dunstan subscribed a charter, confirmed by king Ȧethelstan, in the year 940. Twysden x. Script. p. 2220.] ^g Roff. Histor. Matt. West. [an. 940.] J. Capgrave, [Le-

^f [Osbern, p. 100.] ^h 2 Pet. ii. 12. gend. f. 90. b.] Osbernum, [p. 100.]

A.D. 946. 20. Dunstan returning to court, was in higher favour than ever before. Nor was his interest any whit abated by the untimely death of king ^{King} ^{Edred} ~~the~~ ^{high patron} ^{of Dunstan} (slain by one Leof a thief,) seeing his brother ^{Edred}, succeeding to the crown, continued and increased his kindness to him. Under him Dunstan was the do-all at court, being the king's treasurer, chancellor, counsellor, confessor, all things. Bishops were bountifully proffered him, pick and choose where to please; but none were honoured with his acceptance. Whether because he accounted himself too high for the place, and would not stoop to the employment, or because he esteemed the place too high for him, unable conscientiously to discharge it in the midst of so many avocations. Meantime monasteries were everywhere erected, king ^{Edred} devoutly resigning all his treasure to Dunstan's disposal, secular priests being thrust out of their convents, and monks substituted in their rooms.

A.D. 953. 21. But after Edred's death the case was altered with Dunstan falling into disgrace with king ^{Edwy} ^{his successor}. This king on his coronation day was said to be incestuously embracing both mother and daughter, when Dunstan boldly coming into his boudoir chamber, after bitter reproofs, stoutly fetched him thence, and brought him forth into the company of his noblemen. An heroic act, if true, done with a John-Baptist spirit; and no wonder it. Herod and Herodias, I mean this incestuous king and his

Foot-Wringer in style. — For instance — May 15 — Dr. Geras Reg. 13 — 1
O. c. 1000 — 1

cubines, were highly offended with Dunstan for the A.D. 955.
same^k.
i. Edwii.

22. But good men and grave authors give no belief herein, conceiving king Edwy (how bad soever charactered by the monks his malicious enemies) to have been a worthy prince. In witness whereof they produce the words of Henry Huntingdon, a learned man, but no monk, thus describing him :

<sup>Who, though wronged by the monks,
was a worthy prince.</sup>
^k [This rudeness of St. Dunstan, although mentioned by Malmsbury, upon Osbern's authority, was probably the invention of a later age, since it has not been noticed either by the Saxon Chronicle, Ethelwerd, Ingulph, or Florence of Worcester. The offence of Edwy rather consisted in a contempt of his nobility, and in deserting their society for that of his wife, even on the day of his coronation. His specific crime is not very intelligibly expressed either in Osbern or Malmsbury, the latter charging the king, proxime cognatam invadens uxorem ejus forma deperibat, sapientum consilia fastidiens. This is so interpreted by later writers, as if Edwy had been guilty of adultery with the wife of one of his relations. Later chroniclers, as might be expected, have added to the tale, but hardly any two are consistent with each other. The real reason for Edwy's ill repute among the monkish writers, was, as Fuller has justly observed, his favour to the secular clergy, and his opposition to Dunstan, their violent and unscrupulous advocate. Hear Malmsbury's complaints.

“ Miserrimus satellitibus sub“ nixus, omnes in tota Anglia “ monastici ordinis homines “ prius nudatos facultatum “ auxilio, post etiam deporta“ tos exilio calamitatibus in-“ dignis affecit. Ipsum Dun“ stanum monachorum princi-“ pem in Flandriam propellit.
“ Ea tempestate facies mona“ chorum feda et miserabilis “ erat. Nam et Malmsburiense “ cœnobium plusquam ducen-“ tis septuaginta annis a mo“ nachis inhabitatum, clerico“ rum stabulum fecit.” De Gest. f. 30. See also Osbern, 105.

To the passage from Henry of Huntingdon in favour of Edwy, mentioned in the text, may be added another from Ethelwerd, living at the time, who speaks of him as generally beloved (per regnum amandus). Some ingenious remarks upon the subject will be found in Wharton's notes to Osbern's life of Dunstan, published in the Angl. Sacr. II. 105, 106.]

Fig. 20. The following figures illustrate the method of solution.

5754

3-1-2

Just as you have done, I will do
the same.

King Edward is the fifth of the Stuarts, who became monarch at the end of the civil war, and the first to possess complete power. He died in 1702.

The testimony of his friends makes many men think better of King Edgar, and worse of Duncan, a guilty of a most violent intrusion into the King's chamber, for which he justly incurred his royal displeasure.

23. How king Edgar is banished by king Edwy, not as before from England to England, from the court to his cell at Glastonbury, but is utterly ex-pelled the kingdom, and fleeth into Flanders. When his friends say that his fame prepared his welcome, and the governor of Glastonbury most solemnly entertained him. Meantime all the monks in England of Dunstan's plantation were rooted up, and secular priests set in their places. But soon after happened many commotions in England, especially in Mercia and Northumberland. The monks which write the story of these rebellions conceive it unfit to impart to posterity the cause thereof, which makes us men to suspect that Dunstan, (who could blow coals elsewhere as well as in his furnace, though at distance, virtually or rather viciously present) had a finger, yea, a hand therein. Heart-broken with these ^{A. D. 959.}

1120

¹ Edgar. rebellions, King Edwy died in the flower of his age^o.

24. Edgar succeeds him, and recalls Dunstan ^{Dunstan} _{recalled by}

^o [The reign of king Edwy the Beautiful, as he was called (see Ethelwerd, f. 483.), is narrated with so much partiality by the chroniclers, who generally follow Florence of Worcester with much servility, that it is very difficult to arrive at any distinct understanding of this king's character and conduct. The earliest and most respectable annalists, such as Florence and the Saxon Chron., do not mention the affair with Dunstan at all. The former merely says, “quoniam in commisso “regimine insipienter egit a “Mercensibus et Northim-“brensisbus contemptus relin-“quitur et suus germanus “Clito Eadgarus ab eis rex “eligitur.” The meaning of this term “insipienter” is well explained by William of Malmesbury, f. 30. “Ea tempestate “facies Monachorum fœda et “miserabilis erat. Nam et “Malmesburiense cœnobium “plusquam ducentis septua-“ginta annis a monachis inha-“bitatum clericorum stabulum “fecit.” And a little below he plainly intimates that this severe treatment of the monks was the occasion of Edwy's misfortunes—“luit ille pœ-“nas ausus temerarii,” &c. (Cf. De Pontif. V. 365. Hist. Ramesien. in Gale, I. 393.)—Edwy succeeded to the kingdom 955; drove Dunstan into banishment the next year—the year after, 957, the Mercians and Northumbrians revolt—and he died early in 959. His brother Edgar, being only fourteen, was chosen king by the Mercians in 957, and Dunstan was immediately recalled, and appointed the same year to the see of Worcester. But the Northumbrians had in the previous reigns been in a continual state of revolt, and therefore their rebellion is no proof of Edwy's bad conduct. His brother Edgar, though guilty of some of the worst of vices, idolatry, debauchery, and cruelty, (see Malmesbury, f. 33, and particularly the Saxon Chron. a. 957.) is extolled to an excessive degree by the same writers. The reason is plain,—“abjectis ex “cœnobii clericorum nenii “ad laudem Creatoris summi “monachorum et sanctimonialium catervas, et plusquam “40 monasteria cum eis con-“stitui jussit.” Flor. an. 959. There are some very judicious observations upon this subject, and this king's reign, in Carte's Hist. I. 324. All the monkish writers, when mentioning this dispute of Dunstan with the king, take occasion to observe that their own monastery was spoiled by the king; when it is doubtful whether more than two existed at that time in England, one at Glastenbury, the other at Abingdon. See Wharton's A. S. II. 105, and Parker's Antiq. p. 121.]

A. D. 959. home, receiving him with all possible affection.
2 Edgari. — Yea now Dunstan's stomach was come down, and he could digest a bishopric, which his abstemiousness formerly refused. And one bishopric drew down another, Worcester and London, not successively, but both abreast, went down his consent. Yea, never age afforded more pluralist bishops. In this king's reign Leofwine held Lincoln and Leicesters⁴; Oswald (a great monk-monger, of whom hereafter) held York and Worcester; and Eald⁵, his successor in both churches, did the like, pardoned, yea praised for the same: though Wulfstan (because no favourer of monks) is reproved for the like plurality. Thus two men, though doing the same thing, do not the same thing. Bigamy of bishoprics goes by favour; and it is condemnable in one, what is commendable in another. Odo Severus, archbishop of Canterbury, being ceremoniously to consecrate Dunstan bishop of Worcester, used all the formalities fashionable at the consecration of an archbishop⁶; and being reproved for the same, he answered for himself, that he foresaw that Dunstan instantly after his death would be archbishop of Canterbury. And therefore (a compendious way to spare pains) he only by a provident prolepsis antedated his consecration. Surely, whosoever had seen the decrepit age of Odo, the affection of king Edgar to Dunstan, the affection of Dunstan to dignity,

• Thor-Wright and McGinnis, Oberlin, 1917
• H. C. Wright, the other names S. See Thor-Wright and McGinnis, Oberlin, 1917
• In the early work, after which see C. L. May and Rossenneeded no extraordinary prophetical spirit to presage A. D. 959.

that (on the supposition of Dunstan's surviving him) ²Edgar.
he should succeed him in the archbishopric of Canterbury.

25. Yea king Edgar was so wholly Dunstanized, ^{law to eject} Oswald's that he gave over his soul, body, and estate to be ^{secular} priests.
ordered by him and two more, (then the triumvirate who ruled England,) namely, Æthelwold bishop of Winchester^t, and Oswald bishop of Worcester. This Oswald was the man who procured by the king's authority the ejection of all secular priests out of Worcester, and the placing of monks in their room^v:
which act was called Oswald's law in that age. They

^t [Eadmer. vit. Dunst. p. 219.]

^v [As Æthelwold, another of the bishops, a pupil of Dunstan, and promoted by his interests, expelled by the same means the regular clergy out of the diocese of Winton. He succeeded Brihthelm 963; his compeer Oswald was promoted to Worcester 960. See Florent. Wigorn. sub annis. The same writer tells us that Æthelwold was the most active in urging the king to this conduct.—“Cujus eximius erat consilia-“rius, ad hoc maxime provo-“cavit.”—This is confirmed by the Saxon Chron., who dates his expulsion of the clergy in the second year after his consecration. Not only did this prelate build and endow houses for monks in his diocese, but he also obtained from king Edgar a grant of such as had been ruined and devastated by the Danes, which he repaired and endowed: among the rest Ely and Peterborough. The confirmation of the charter of Peterborough, and its endowments by king Edgar, may be seen in the Saxon Chron. sub a. 963.

Bishop Burnet, in his History of the Reform. I. 43, has quoted an Insperimus of king Edgar's (Rot. Patent. 2. Hen. VIII. par. 1.), erecting the priory and convent of Worcester, which bears date a. 964. on St. Innocent's day. It rehearses that he did with the consent of his princes and gentry confirm and establish that priory; that he had erected forty-seven monasteries, which he intended to increase to fifty, the number of jubilee; and that the former incumbents should be for ever excluded, inasmuch as they had preferred, to the prejudice of their order and the ecclesiastical benefice, to adhere to their wives instead of serving God chastely and canonically.]

Dunstan did septenary penance to expiate every mortal sin (to use their own terms) he committed, <sup>A. D. 969.
12 Edgar.</sup> he must have been a Methuselah, extremely aged, before the day of his death.

27. More commendable was Dunstan's carriage towards an English count, who lived incestuously with his own kinswoman^a. Dunstan admonished him once, twice, thrice ; nothing prevailed : whereupon he proceeded to excommunicate him. The count slighted his excommunication, conceiving his head too high for church-censures to reach it. King Edgar (falsely informed) desires Dunstan to absolve him, and is denied. Yea the pope sends to him to the same purpose, and Dunstan persists in his refusal^b. At last the count, conquered with Dunstan's constancy, and the sense of his own sin, came into a national council at Canterbury, where Dunstan sat president, (active therein to substitute monks in the places of secular priests,) on his bare feet, with a bundle of rods, tendering himself to Dunstan's chastisement. This wrought on Dunstan's mild nature, scarce refraining from tears ; who presently absolved him.

28. Three things herein are remarkable : first, ^{Observa-} that bribes in the court of Rome may purchase a ^{on.} malefactor to be innocent ; secondly, that the pope himself is not so infallible, but that his key may miss the lock, and he be mistaken in matter of absolution ; thirdly, that men ought not so with blind obedience to obey his pretended holiness, but that if “ Sanctas conscriberet scripturas, per omnes fines imperii sui populis custodiendas mandaret.” Osbern, p. 111.]

^a [Eadmer, ib. p. 215.]
^b Osbern. in vita Dunstani.
[No such passage occurs in this author.]

A.D. 969. (with Dunstan here) they see just cause to the contrary, it is no mortal sin to disobey his commands.

12 Edgar's canons why by us here related.

29. The apprenticeship of Edgar's penance long since expired, he flourished in all monarchical lustre: sole founder of many, co-founder of more, benefactor to most abbeys in England. And as he gave new easies to most monasteries, (repairing their outward buildings,) so he gave new linings to all, substituting monks instead of the secular priests, whom he expelled¹. Many ecclesiastical canons were by him ordained, which at large are presented in sir Henry Spelman, and which I have neither list nor leisure to recount in this my history. Our women have a proverb; "It is a sad burden to carry a dead man's child;" and surely an historian hath no heart to take much pains (which herein are pains indeed) to exemplify dead canons, dead and buried long since, as most relating to monstery; this age, wherein we live, being little fond of antiquity, to know those things which were antiquated so many years since.

Edgar a most true and pious king.

30. Now though the devotion of king Edgar may be condemned to be biassed to superstition, yet because the sincerity of his heart sought to advance God's honour, according to the light in those dark days, he appears one of the most puissant princes that ever England enjoyed, both in church and commonwealth. I have read in a most fair and authentic gilded manuscript², wherein he styleth himself God's vicar in England, for the ordering ecclesiastical matters: a title which at this day the pope will hardly vouchsafe to any Christian princes. His reign was blessed with peace and prosperity, both by land and ^{A. D. 969.} sea; insomuch that in a royal frolic ^{12 Edgari.} eight petty kings rowed him over the river Dee near to Chester, namely, five princes of Wales, whereof Hoel-Dha was the principal, Kened king of Scotland, Malcolm king of Cumberland, and Mac-cus, a great sea-robber, who may pass for the prince of pirates^e.

¹ The pope order to Edgar. Flor. Wigorn. p. 120. ² Very necessary to be seen. Extant in the press, but not yet of the publick library of sir Thomas Cotes.

31. This Hoel-Dha, contemporary with king Edgar^f, ^{A. D. 970.} was he that held a national council for all Wales at ^{A national council in Wales.} a place called Ty-guin, or the Whitehouse, because built of white hurdles, to make it more beautiful, regulated after this manner. Out of every hundred in Wales he chose six laymen, with whom he joined all the eminent ecclesiastical persons (accounted an hundred and forty) in his dominions. Out of those he chose eleven laymen and one clergyman, (but such a one as who alone by himself might pass virtually for eleven,) Blangoridus by name, to enact what laws they pleased, which after the impression of royal assent upon them, should be observed by that nation. One might suspect this council, thus overpowered with laics therein, which pinch on the priests' side; whereas we find the canons therein wholly made in favour of the clergy: enacting this among the rest, that the presence of a priest and a judge constitute a legal court, as the two persons only in the quorum thereof.

32. But methinks the laws therein enacted (which ^{The merry laws made} a learned antiquary presents us at large^g) fall far ^{therein.}

^e [Flor. Wigorn. a. 973. of Durham he died in 951. Malm. f. 31. "Maccus pluri- See also Wharton's A. S. II. "marum rex insularum," as p. xxxii.] Florence describes him; that is, ^g Spelman's Concil. I. 411. king of Man and the Hebrides.] [Wilkins, I. 208, and IV. 769.]

^f [Yet according to Simeon sq.]

A.D. 970. short of the gravity of a council, except any will + x.
 13 Edgari. — use it from the age thereof; what we count light and trivial, might be esteemed serious and solid in those days. Besides, the laws discover in them a conceited affectation of the number of three. In three cases a wife may legally leave her husband:
 first, if he hath a leprosy; secondly, if he hath a stinking breath; thirdly, and if he be unable to give her due benevolence. In three cases it was lawful for a man to kiss his neighbour's wife: first, at a banquet; secondly, at the Welsh play called Guanraffau; and thirdly, when he comes from a far journey, by way of salutation. If a man and his wife were to part asunder, they were to divide their goods betwixt them so, that she was to have the sheep, he the hogs, she the milk and milk-vessels, with all the dishes save one; he all the beer and barrels, with the axe, saw, &c.

A.D. 971. 33. But how silly soever these canons seem to our Confirmed by the pope. modern critics, they were then conceived of such weight and worth, that king Hool-Dha with his archbishop of St. David's, the bishops of Bangor, Llandaff, and St. Asaph, are said to have taken a journey to Rome, and procured the pope's confirmation to them. Nor find I ought else of this synod, save that the close thereof presents us with a list of seven episcopal seats then in Wales: 1. St. David's 2. Ismael, 3. Degemar, 4. Ussylld, 5. Teilaw, 6. Thau-lydawg, 7. Genau'r. I am not Welshman enough to point at these places, and to shew you where they be at this day, which we leave to some skilful antiquary of their own nation. Only we find that whereas the ² Query whether Bangor, Llandaff, and St. Asaph be not comprised under these.

churches were burdened with some payments out of them, two of the bishops' sees (Ussylld and Genau)<sup>A.D. 971.
14 Edgari.</sup> were freed from the same. And this satisfactory reason is rendered of their exemption, quia terris carent, because they had no lands belonging unto them.

34. King Edgar was peaceably gathered to his fathers^h, leaving his crown to Edward his son, and his son (because under age) to the tuition of Dunstan. In this king's reign three councils were successively called, to determine the differences between monks and secular priestsⁱ. The first was at Winchester, where the priests being outed of their convents, earnestly pressed for restitution, and sought by arguments to clear their innocence, and prove their title to their ancient possessions. The council seemed somewhat inclinable to favour unto them; when presently a voice, as coming from a crucifix behind Dunstan, is reported to be heard, saying,

Absit hoc ut fiat, absit hoc ut fiat; judicastis bene, mutaretis non bene^k. “God forbid it should be done, “God forbid it should be done; “ye have judged it well, and “should change it ill.”

Whether these words were spoken in Latin or English, authors leave us unresolved. Monks equal this (for the truth thereof) to the still small voice to Elijah^l, whilst others suspect some forgery; the rather, because it is reported to come as from a crucifix: they fear some secret falsehood in the fountain, because visible superstition was the cistern

^h [Flor. in an. Osbern, p. from Rudborn's Hist. Winton. 112. Malm. f. 33. b.] ^{niens. in Wharton's Angl.}

ⁱ [See Wilkins' Conc. I. Sacr. I. 217.]

263.] ^{11 Kings xix. 12.}

^k [Parker De Antiq. p. 126.]

A.D. 977. thereof. However, this voice proved for the ~~pros~~³ ~~Edvardi~~ ~~Martyris.~~ casting voice to the secular priests, who thereby were overborne in their cause, and so was the council dissolved.

~~Secular priests strive still.~~ 35. Yet still the secular priests did struggle, refusing to be finally concluded with this transient airy oracle. *To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, etc.*¹⁰ They had no warrant to rely on such a vocal decision, from which they appealed to the scripture itself. A second council is called at Kyrlynge, (now Katlidge in Cambridgeshire, the barony of the right honourable the lord North,) but nothing to purpose effected therein¹¹. Dunstan, say the monks, still answered his name, that is, dun, a rocky mountain, and stane, a stone¹², (but whether a precious stone, or a rock of offence, let others decide,) persisting unmovable in his resolution; nor was any thing performed in this council, but that by the authority thereof people were sent on pilgrimage to St. Mary at Abingdon.

~~A portentous council at Caln~~ 36. The same year a third council was called at Caln in Wiltshire¹³. Hither repaired priests and monks, with their full forces, to try the last conclusion in the controversy betwixt them. The former, next the equity of the cause, relied more on the ability of their champion, one Beornelm, a Scotch bishop, who with no less eloquence than strength, with scripture and reason defended their cause. When behold, on a sudden the beams brake in the room where they were assembled, and most of the

¹⁰ Isa. viii. 2.

¹¹ Dunstanus quid percepit Flor. Wig. a. 977. Malm. "Intermittemus quod Cibers f. 33. Gibson thinks it the place. Compare also p. 12. Some is Kyrlington in Ox. &c. Flor. Wig. l. 1. See W. Fordshore.)

¹² Dunstanus quid percepit

¹³ Flor. Wig. l. 1. See W. Fordshore.)

secular priests were slain, and buried under the A.D. 977. ruins thereof. All were affrighted, many maimed; ³ Edvardi Martyris. only the place whereon Dunstan sat either (as some say) remained firm, or fell in such sort, that the timber (the sword to kill others) proved the shield to preserve him from danger.

37. Some behold this story as a notable untruth: ^{Several censures on this sad accident.} others suspect the Devil therein, not for a liar, but a murderer, and this massacre procured by compact with him: a third sort conceived that Dunstan, who had so much of a smith, had here something of a carpenter in him, and some device used by him about pinning and propping of the room. It renders it the more suspicious, because he dissuaded king Edward from being present there, pretending his want of age; though he was present in the last council, and surely he was never the younger for living some months since the same assembly. If truly performed, Dunstan appears happier herein than Samson himself, who could not so sever his foes, but both must die together. Sure I am, no ingenuous papist nowadays will make any uncharitable inference from such an accident: especially since the fall of Black friars, 1623, enough to make all good men turn the censuring of others into an humble silence, and pious adoring of Divine providence.

38. But the monks made great advantage of this ^{Seculars} accident, conceiving that heaven had confirmed their ^{outed, and monks ad-} cause, as lately by word at Winchester, so now by work in this council at Caln. Hereupon secular priests are every where outed, and monks substituted in their room. Indeed these latter in civil respect were beheld as more beneficial to their con-

A.D. 977. vents; because secular priests did marry, and at their deaths did condere testamento, "make their" ³*Edvardi Martyris.* "wills," and bequeathed their goods to their wives and children; whilst monks, having no issue (which they durst own), made their monastery heir of all they had. It was also objected against the priests, that by their looseness and laziness, left at large in their lives, they had caused the general declination of piety at this time; whilst it was presumed of the monks, that by the strict rules of observance to which they were tied, they would repair the ruins of religion in all places.

Priests hardly dealt with. 39. It appears not what provision was made for these priests when ejected; and they seem to have had hard measure to be dispossessed of their civil right. Except any will say it was no injury to them to lose their places so soon, but a great favour that they enjoyed them so long, living hitherto on the free bounty of their founders, and now at the full dispose of the church and state. Little can be said in excuse of the priests, and less in commendation of the monks; who though they swept clean at the first, as new besoms, yet afterwards left more dust behind them of their own bringing in than their predecessors had done. Thus the hive of the church was no whit bettered by putting out drones and placing wasps in their room. Yea, whereas formerly corruptions came into the church at the wicket, now the broad gates were opened for their entrance, monkyery making the way for ignorance and superstition to overspread the whole world.

* The effects of D. states they were completely exposed to the secular clergy from such cities as Winchester were probably very great, since Winchester and the like—out

40. Another humour of the former age (to make one digression for all) still continued and increased, <sup>A.D. 977.
4 Edvardi
Martyris.</sup> venting itself in the fair foundations and stately structures of so many monasteries⁸. So that one beholding their greatness, being corrivals with some towns in receipt and extent, would admire that they could be so neat; and considering their neatness, must wonder they could be so great; and lastly, accounting their number, will make all three the object of his amazement. Especially, seeing many of these were founded in the Saxon heptarchy, when seven kings put together did spell but one in effect. So that it may seem a miracle what invisible Indies those petty princes were masters of, building such structures which impoverish posterity to repair them. For although some of these monasteries were the fruit of many ages, long in ripening, at several times, by sundry persons, all whose parcels and additions met at last in some tolerable uniformity; yet most of them were begun and finished, absolute and entire, by one founder alone. And although we allow that in those days artificers were procured, and materials purchased at easy rates, yet there being then scarceness of coin, (as a little money would then buy much ware, so much ware must first in exchange be given to provide that little money,) all things being audited proportionably, the wonder still remains as great as before. But here we see with what eagerness those designs are undertaken and pursued which proceed from blind zeal: every finger being more than an always by open, frequently by underhand means. The clergy of Winchester, when they had the option of conforming to the rules of the monastic institution, or deserting their cures, preferred the latter alternative. "M-"gis vitam mollem elegissent," says Malmesbury, "tunc tota in-

"sula incertis vagabuntur sedi-
"bus," De Gestis Reg. f. 31. b.]
• [Malmsb. f. 31.]

A.D. 977. hand to build, when they thought merit was annexed to their performances. Oh! with what might and main did they mount their walls both day and night, erroneously conceiving that their souls were advantaged to heaven, when taking the rise from the top of a steeple of their own erection¹.

Caution to our age. 41. But it will not be amiss to mind our forgetful age, that, seeing devotion (now better informed), long sithence hath desisted to express itself in such pompous buildings, she must find some other means and manner to evidence and declare her sincerity. Except any will say that there is less heart required where more light is granted; and that our practice of piety should be diminished, because our knowledge thereof is increased. God, no doubt, doth justly expect that religion should testify her thankfulness to him by some eminent way and works; and where the fountain of piety is full, it will find itself a vent to flow in, though not through the former channels of superstition.

A.D. 978. King Edward went to give his mother-in-law at Corfe-castle a respectable visit, when by her ~~co~~-^{desire} ~~mur~~-^{alias} trivance he was barbarously murdered, so to pave martyred. the way for her son Ethelred his succession to the crown. But king Edward, by losing his life, got the title of a martyr, so constantly called in our chronicles. Take the term in a large acceptation, otherwise restrictively it signifies such an one as suffers for the testimony of the truth. But, seeing this Edward was cruelly murdered, and is said after death to work miracles, let him, by the courtesy of the church, pass

This is certainly not true. It is well known that the ~~churches~~ ^{temples} of the Saracens were erected in the same manner as those of the Christians. The Saracens had no altars, and therefore no ~~representations~~ ^{offerings} were made to them. The Saracens were a people of a very simple and frugal nature, and therefore their temples were built of the easiest materials, and were very poor in appearance.

for a martyr, not knowing any act or order to the contrary, to deny such a title unto him^t.

A.D. 978.
6 Edvardi
Martyris.

^t [On the death of Edgar there was a contention among the nobles about a successor; some supporting the claims of Æthelred, and others those of Edward, but by the power of Dunstan it was determined in favour of the latter (Flor. Wigorn. a. 975.) Immediately on the death of his father, through the influence of his mother-in-law and some of the nobles, the regular clergy were recalled; this produced two parties in the state, thus described by Ingulf: "Cujus [Edwardi] sancta simplicitate et innocentia tam abusa est factio tyrannorum, per reginæ favorem et potentiam præcipue roborata, quod per Merciam monachis de quietus busdam monasteris ejectis clerici sunt inducti, qui statim monasteriorum inaneria ducibus terræ distribuebant, ut sic in suas partes obligati eos contra monachos defensarent. Tunc de monasterio Eveshamensi monachis ex pulsis clerici fuerunt introducti, terræque tyranni de terris ecclesiæ præmiati sunt. Quibus regina novercali nequitia stans cum clericis in regis opprobrium favebat, cum monachis autem rex et sancti episcopi persistebant, sed tyranni fulti reginæ favore et potentia super monachos triumphabant. Multus inde tumultus in omni angulo Angliæ factus est." f. 506. See Flor. a. 975. After a brief reign of four years this king came to an untimely end, hunting near Corfe-castle, as the monkish writers did not scruple to affirm, by the hands of his step-mother. But the Saxon annalist, who was either contemporary with the fact, or transcribed his narrative from one who was, mentions nothing of his mother's participation in the crime; and Hen. of Huntingdon, whose testimony is valuable as an unprejudiced writer, speaks thus of his death: "occisus est proditione gentis suæ."—And then introduces the subsequent tale, as a dubious report: "dicitur autem quod noverca ejus mater, &c." Hist. f. 204. But though Flor. of Wigorn. and Ingulf attribute his death to the instigation of Alfleda, they give not the slightest foundation for supposing that Æthelred "puer decem annorum" (Ingulf. l.) could at all participate in it. The progress of falsehood, in this instance, may be traced with some instruction, as to the credit of the monkish writers. Ingulf says that Dunstan, upon consecrating Æthelred, addressed him after the ceremony thus: "quia ascendi disti ad thronum tuum per mortem fratris tui, quem occidit mater tua,"—which version of the tale Malmsbury, who wrote but very few years after, thus enlarges on; "quia, inquit, per mortem fratris tui aspirasti ad regnum audi verbum,"—and speaks afterwards and before of his sharing

A.D. 978. 43. Ethelred, Edward's half-brother, succeeded him in the throne¹. One with whom Dunstan had a quarrel from his cradle, because, when an infant, he left more water in the font than he found there at his baptizing. Happy Dunstan himself, if guilty of no greater fault, which could be no sin (nor properly a slovenness) in an infant, if he did as an infant! Yet from such his addition, Dunstan prognosticated an inundation of Danes would ensue in this island: which accordingly came to pass. But Ethelred is more to be condemned for the blood he shed when a man; it being vehemently suspected that he was accessory with his mother to the murdering of his brother Edward.

A.D. 987. Dunstan's corpse wrongfully claimed by the convent of Glassenbury. 44. But Dunstan survived not to see his prediction take effect, for he was happily prevented by death, and buried on the south side of the high altar in the church of Canterbury: where his tomb was famous for some time, till Thomas Becket eclipsed the same; seeing saints, like new basons, sweep clean at the first, and afterwards are clean swept out, by newer saints which succeed them. Yea, Dunstan's grave grew so obscure at Canterbury, that the monks of Glassenbury taking heart thereto, and advantaged by John Capgrave's report, that anno 1012 Dunstan's corpse were translated thither, pretended his burial, and built him a shrine in their convent². Men and in, and conniving at, the crime which in a boy of scarce ten years of age is so ridiculous, and so perverse a corruption of his authorities, that no one but a monk, anxious to blacken the supporters of the married clergy, would ever have imagined

¹ Flor. Wigorn. a. 978 Will. of Malmesbury, f. 142.

² The monks of Glassenbury laid claim to the body of St. Dunstan three centuries before Capgrave wrote. About fifty years after the death of Dunstan they pretended that some of their body had been money met at Glassenbury on this mistake; and ^{A. D. 987.} their convent got more by this eight foot length of redi-^{to Ethel-} ground, (the supposed tomb of Dunstan,) than eight hundred acres of the best land they possessed elsewhere. Whereupon William Warham, archbishop of Canterbury, to try the truth, and to prevent further fraud herein, caused a solemn search to be made in the cathedral of Canterbury after Dunstan's corpse, in the place tradition reported him to be interred.

45. Four of the friars, fittest for the work, to wit, ^{A night} hue-anddeputed to take charge of Canterbury, which had been deserted on the murder of St. Elphegus by the Danes. They pretended that in this interval the body of Dunstan was removed to Glastonbury, and an abbot of that monastery substituted in his room. On this occasion Eadmer, a monk of Canterbury, who had witnessed the translation of Dunstan's body to the new church at Canterbury, undertaken by the order of archbishop Lanfranc, addressed a letter to the monks of Glastonbury, explaining these circumstances, and shewing the impossibility of such a theft having ever been committed. Referring to the exhumation of Dunstan's body, with all its appropriate ornaments, which he had himself witnessed, he asks, How was it possible for the monks to procure a body habited like the corpse of the archbishop; with its mitre, pall, pins, and shoes (infulatum, palliatum, spindalatum, et sandaliis calciatum)? Especially the pall, which could only be procured from Rome, and was never granted to any abbot of Glastonbury. Besides that the corpse was buried in the middle of the quire, close to the steps of the high altar, in a leaden coffin at a very great depth, as was formerly the custom with the Angli. He then addresses them with these remarkable words: “Ossa itaque quibus onerastis imaginem nostri Redemptoris, ne ipse nobis indignetur, nostro consilio aufereatis. Satis enim habet in se unde honoretur, nec opus est ut sanctilas ei aut ex ossibus mortuorum aut aliunde cumulatur.” p. 216. (See this letter in Wharton's Ang. Sac. II. 222.)

Notwithstanding, the monks of Glastonbury, as it appears, would not forego their claims. For as late as the year 1508 a scrutiny was made for the body of St. Dunstan by order of William Warham, then archbishop of Canterbury. The result was such as is here detailed by Fuller. The papers relative to this search are also printed by Wharton, ib. p. 227—233.]

A.D. 987. of stronger bodies than brains, undertook to make this scrutiny, anno 1508, the 22nd of April. Great caution was used that all should be done extra laicis, "no laymen being present," whether because their eyes were too profane to behold so holy an object, or too prying to discover the default, if the search succeeded not. In the night they so plod their work, that ere morning they discovered Dunstan's coffin, and rested the day following from more digging; as well they might, having taken so much pains, and gained so much profit by their endeavours.

Discovered, with the manner of the interment thereof. 46. Next night they on afresh; and, with main force, plucked up the ponderous coffin upon the pavement. A coffin built (as one may say) three stories high: the outermost of wood (but also made iron with the multitude of nails therein); within that another of plain lead; within that a third of wrought lead, wherein the bones of Dunstan lay in his pontifical vestments, with this inscription in a plate.

Hic requiescit sanctus Dunstanus archiepiscopus. Some lumps of flesh were found, which were said to

* Archdr. Eccles. Cant. exemplified by my good friend Mr. Will. Sonner, in his Description of Cant. in Appendix Script. Cant. ed. 1704. The monks who were employed in the search, after labouring all night, found a leaden chest, in which the reliques were deposited. This chest was inserted in the framework of the vault; within it was another coffin of wood, covered within and without with lead, and thickly studded with cramps or nails. The whole was so firmly fastened with ironwork, that they were compelled to defer their labours till the following night, and procure additional assistance for the completion of their task. With a third or coffin already descended they found another shell curiously wrought of lead, castra quadam pulcherrime facta, within which was another almost complete and well-constructed coffin, and was supposed to have been the coffin in which St. Dunstan was originally buried. See Ang. Sac. II. 227.)

smell very sweet (the relics perchance of some spices A.D. 987. which embalmed him), and all done in the presence ^{to Ethel-} _{redi.} of many worthy witnesses: amongst whom, Cuthbert Tunstal was one, then the archbishop's chancellor, afterward bishop of Durham. Hereupon the archbishop sent his mandate to the abbot and convent of Glassenbury, henceforward to desist from any jactitation of Dunstan's corpse, and abusing people with such pretences. A fault most frequent in that convent, challenging almost the monopoly of all English saints, witness that impudent lie of the rhythming monk, writing thus of Glassenbury;

Hic tumulus sanctus, hic scala poli celebratur;
Vix luit inferni pœnas hic qui tumulatur.

But, who is rather to be believed? St. Peter, that saith, The righteous shall scarcely be saved: or this monk, affirming that, “ Whoso is buried at Glassen-“ bury shall scarcely be damned.”

47. After the death of Dunstan, their patron, the A.D. 988. ^{Priests and} _{monks alternately} cast out of the convent of Canterbury, or rather cast out. monks out themselves by their misdemeanours. Man in honour hath no understanding, &c.^z They waxed so wanton with possessing the places of secular priests, that a monk himself of Canterbury confesseth, Mönachi propter eorum insolentiam sedibus pulsi, et clerici introducti^a. “ Monks for their insolency were “ driven out of their seats, and secular clerks brought “ into their room.” Thus was it often, in dock, out nettle, as they could strengthen their parties. For Siricius, the next archbishop of Canterbury, endea^y 1 Pet. iv. 18.

Brit. p. 35. [Compare the ^z Psal. xlix. 20.

printed Chronicle of Thorn, p.

^a Wil. Thorn cited by Ant.

1781. ed. Twysden.]

A.D. 989.
12 Ethel-
red.

voured the reexpulsion of the priests; which by Elfric his successor was effected.

The Danes
reinva-England.

48. But soon after the Danes revenged the quarrel of the secular priests; and by a firm ejection ousted the monks before they were well warm in their nests. Their fury fell more on convents than castles; whether, because the former were in that age more numerous, (castles afterwards were increased by William the Conqueror,) or because their prey and plunder was presumed the richest and easiest to be gotten; or because the Danes, then generally pagans, principally spited places of religion. A relapse is far more dangerous than a simple disease, as here it proved in the Danes. England for these last sixty years had been cured of, and cleared from their cruelty, which now returned more terrible than ever before.

A.D. 990.
The unreadiness of king Ethel-red advanc-

49. These Danes were also advantaged by the unactivity of king Ethelred, therefore surnamed the Unready^b in our chronicles. The clock of his con-

^b There seems but very little reason for fixing this epithet upon Ethelred; since the misfortunes of his reign ought rather to be attributed to a train of causes laid by his predecessors, of which he experienced the unhappy effects, than to any mismanagement of his own. The government of the counties by dukes had now become hereditary, in imitation of the great vassals of the crown in the French empire; the civil and the military powers were united in the same person. Alfred and his immediate successors foreseeing the inconveniences which must inevitably follow from such a union, had wisely entrusted the civil judicature and command of the military forces to the different counties to distinct persons; but the distractio of the kingdom, and weakness of some persons, had caused the neglect of this wise provision. Another great cause of the inefficiency of his forces was, the intermarriage of the nobles with the Danes and the employment of officers of Danish extraction in the army, who, making common cause with the enemy, frustrated by sultations and executions was always set some hours ^{A.D. 990.} too late, vainly striving with much industry to re-¹⁴ dress, what a little providence might seasonably have prevented. Now when this unready king met with the Danes, his over-ready enemies, no wonder if lamentable was the event thereof. The best thing I find recorded of this king Æthelred is, that in his days began the trial of causes by a jury of twelve men, to be chosen out of the vicinage, of like quality, as near as may be suited to the persons concerned therein. Hereby men have most fair play for their lives: and let it be the desires of all honest hearts, that whilst we pluck off the badges of all Norman slavery, we part not with the livery of our old Saxon liberty.

50. In this sad condition king Æthelred hearkened ^{A.D. 991.} to the persuasions of Siric archbishop of Canterbury, ^{A dear} and with ten thousand pounds purchased a present ^{peace} ^{bought of} the Danes.^{c.} Indeed it was conformable to the calling of a churchman to procure peace, treachery any successful movements which might be made against them, both by perplexing the king's councils, and betraying his intentions. The consequence of all this was, that Æthelred knew not whom to trust. See Flor. Wigorn. a. 992-3, 998-9, 1007, 1009. An incidental remark in William of Malmesbury justifies this statement. "Veruntamen multa mihi cogitanti mirum videtur cur homo, ut a manibus accepimus, neque multum fatuus neque multum ignavus, in tam tristis pallore tot calamitatum vitam

" consumperit. Cujus rei causam si quis me interroget, non facile respondeam nisi ducum defectionem ex superbia regis prodeuntem." Malms. f. 35.

The same writer has touchingly described the conduct of the English, when the king commanded a general massacre of the Danes: "fuit videre miseriam, dum quisque charisimatos hospites, quos etiam arctissima necessitudo dulciores efficerat, cogeretur prodere et amplexus gladio deturbare." Malms. ib. [Malmsb. f. 35.]

A. D. 991. having not only scripture precepts therein, *work peace and pursue it*⁴, but also precedents for the same.
 15. Ethel-
 redi. — when gracious Hezekiah with a present pacified Sennacherib to desist from invading him⁵. However, this archbishop generally suffered in his reputation, condemned of all for counselling of what was first, dishonourable; that an entire nation, being at home in their own land, should purchase a peace from foreigners, fewer in number, and fetching their recruits and warlike provisions from a far country: let them be paid in due coin, not silver, but steel. Secondly, unprofitable; if once the Danes got but the trick to make the English bleed money to buy peace, they would never leave them till they had sucked out their heart-blood, and exhausted the whole treasure of the land.

Multitudes of monasteries caused the Danish invasion

51. Indeed one may safely affirm, that the multitude of monasteries invited the invasion, and facilitated the conquest of the Danes over England, and that in a double respect; first, because not only the fruit of the king's exchequer (I mean ready money) was spent by this king his predecessors in founding of monasteries, but also the root thereof, his demesne lands, plucked up and parted with to endow the same; whereby the sinews of war were wanting, to make effectual opposition against foreign enemies. Secondly, because England had at this time more flesh or fat than bones, wherein the strength of a body consists, no monks than military men. For instance, Holy-Island near Northumberland is sufficiently known, for the position thereof, an advantageous landing-place, especially in relation to Denmark^f. This place was presently forsaken of the A.D. 994.

fearful monks, frighted with the Danes their ap-^{18 Ethel-} proach; and Aldhunus, the bishop thereof, removed his cathedral and convent to Durham, an inland place of more safety. Now, had there been a castle in the place of this monastery, to secure the same with fighters instead of feeders, men of arms instead of men of bellies therein, probably they might have stopped the Danish invasion at the first inlet thereof.
England then as much wanting martial men, as since it hath surfeited with too many of them^g.

52. The Danes, having received and spent their A.D. 995.
money, invaded England afresh, according to all wise city of the men's expectation. It is as easy for armed might to ^{The cru-} pick a quarrel, as it is hard for naked innocence to make resistance. The deluge of their cruelty over-ran the realm^h; whose sword made no more difference betwixt the ages, sexes, and conditions of people, than the fire which they cast on houses made distinction in the timber thereof, whether it was elm, oak, or ash; the fierceness of the one killing, the fury of the other consuming all it met with.
Indeed in some small skirmishes the English got the better, but all to no purpose. There is a place in Hertfordshire called Danes-end, where the inhabitants by tradition report (uncertain of the exact date thereof) that a fatal blow in a battle was given to the Danes thereabouts. But alas! the Danes-end was but Danes-beginning; they quickly recovered

^f [Florent. Wig. a. 994.]

which England consisted, they

^g Viz. in the wars between York and Lancaster.

overran sixteen. Malmesb. f.

35.]

^h [Of the thirty-two pagi of

A.D. 995. themselves as many, and mighty in the field, and it
^{19 Ethel-} ~~redi.~~ seemed an endless end to endeavour their utter extirpation. Thus this century sets with little mirth, and the next is likely to arise with more mourning.

THE ELEVENTH CENTURY.

BALDWINO HAMEY, MEDICINÆ DOCTORI LITERATISSIMO, MECCENATI SUO DIGNISSIMO^a.

Conqueruntur nostrates novissimo hoc decennio, novam rerum faciem indui, nec mutata solum, sed et inversa esse omnia. Hujus indicia plurima proferunt, tristia sane ac dolenda, dominos nimirum servis postpositos, dum alii e servis domini repente prodierint.

At, ad metamorphosin hanc probandum, argumentum suppetit mihi ipsi luctum et memoratu jucundum. Solent enim ægroti, si quando medicum adeant, manus afferre plenas, referre vacuas. At ipse e contra te sœpe accessi et æger et inops, decessi integer et bene nummatus. Quoties enim opus hoc nostrum radicitus exaruisset, si non imbre munificentia tuae fuisset irrigatum?

HIS century began (as children generally are born) with crying; partly for ²⁶ Ethelredi. a massacre made by the English on the ^{Murder of} _{the Danes} ^{in a church.} Danes, but chiefly for the cruelty committed by the Danes on the English^b.

Concerning the former, certain Danes fled into a

^a [Arms: gules, a fesse or, in chief a roebuck courant of the second, in base three mullets argent, two and one.— By St. George's visitation of London 1633, it appears that two physicians of the name of Baldwin Hamey, father and son, were then living in London, the elder married to Sarah, sister of James Oeils, the younger to Anne, daughter of Francis de Petain of Rouen in Normandy. The coat as above blazoned is assigned to the family. B.

Baldwin Hamey the son, the subject of the dedication, was a doctor of physic in Leyden in Holland, and was incorporated at Oxford in the year 1629. In the year following he was admitted candidate of the college of physicians at London, afterwards, fellow, censor, anatomy reader, elector, register and consiliarius of the college. He died on the 14th of May 1676, aged 76, and was buried in the middle aisle of the church of Chelsea, St. Luke, near London. See Wood's Fasti, I. 248.]

^b [Malmsbury De Gestis Reg. f. 39. b.]

A.D. 1011. church at Oxford^b, hoping the sanctity thereof according to the devout principles of that age would secure them: and probably such pity might have inclined them to Christianity. Whereas by command from king Ethelred, they were all burned in the place^c; whose blood remained not long unrevenged.

Canterbury sacked: Al- phage killed by the Danes. The Danish fury fell (if not first) fiercest on the city of Canterbury, with fire and sword, destroying eight thousand people therein: and such authors who quadruple that number, surely take in not only the vicinage, but all Kent to make up their account. Alphegus the archbishop of Canterbury, commonly called Alphage, was then slain, and since sainted; a church nigh Cripplegate in London being consecrated to his memory.

Believe what you list. 2. A monk of Canterbury reports, that the abbey of St. Augustine was saved on this occasion; a Danish soldier stealing the pall from the tomb of St. Augustine, it stuck so close under his arm-pits, that it could not be parted from his skin until he had publicly made confession of his fault: ultimo raptorem respiuit, saith the author^d. And hereupon the Danes of invaders turned defenders of that monastery. But others conceive, if it found extraordinary favour, their money (not this miracle) procured it^e. Sure I am, when Achian stole the Babylonish garment, he was left at large to discovery by lot, and no miracle detected him^f. Next year a nameless bishop of London was sacrificed to their fury, used worse than the task-masters of Israel, (on whose back the number of bricks wanting were only scored in A. D. 1012. blows^g (being killed outright for want of present redi-^{36 Ethel-} pay of the tribute promised unto them^h.

^b St. Ethelwold's Mlesh. ^c Thorn in his Discourse of Canterbury. Col. 108.

^d See Will. Scirmer in his Historia, p. 247. Matth. West. Antiqu. of Canterbury, p. 36. ^e Joshua viii. 18.

3. Cambridge and Oxford both of them deeply More crutasted of this bitter cup at the same time. True it The valour is, some two years since, when the rest of the East-^{of Cam-} Angles cowardly fled away, homines comitatus Can- tabrigiae viriliter obstiterunt, unde Anglis regnabitibus
*laus Cantabrigiensis provinciae splendide florebat*ⁱ.
Hence it is that I have read (though unable at the instant to produce my author) that Cambridgeshire men claim an ancient (now antiquated) privilege, to lead the van in all battles^k. But valour at last little befriended them, the Danes burning Cambridge to ashes, and harassing the country round about.

4. Here the state-historians inform the reader A. D. 1016.
of intestine wars betwixt Edmund Ironside, (so Two Eng-called for his hardy enduring all troubles,) king of England, defender, and Canutus the Dane, invader of this land; till at last, after a personal duel fought, the land was equally divided betwixt them^l. A division wherewith both seemed, neither were well pleased; seeing the least whole head cannot be fitted with the biggest half crown; all or none was their desire. Edmund at last with his silver hand Edmund Ironside

^g Exod. v. 14.

^h Hen. Hunt. [f. 207.] Rog. Hoved. [f. 248.] In this reign the Danes received first 10,000*l.*, then 24,000*l.*, then 30,000*l.* See Malm. f. 35. b.]

ⁱ Chronic. Jo. Bromton, p. 887. [Flor. Wigorn. a. 1010.]

^k [There seems no authority for this assertion. See "The Appeal," &c. p. ii. p. 20.]

^l [In the division of the Flor. Wigorn. p. 298, 18.]

kingdom Edmund had Wessex, East-anglia, Essex, all the countries on the south of the Thames, together with the city of London. Canute was satisfied with the northern parts, thereby tacitly acknowledging his rival's superiority, Wessex having been for a long time considered the regal portion of the island, and the seat of the reigning monarch. See

A.D. 1016. was too hard for the other his iron side; who by his 1 Canuti. treach-

¹ Canuti.

² Canutus his cruelty.

 converted into charity.

promised bribes prevailed with one Edric to kill this his corrival; which being performed, he was fairly advanced with a halter^m. It would spoil the trade of all traitors, if such coin only were current in paying their rewards.

5. Canutus, or Knot the Dane, (from whom a town in Lincolnshire is so called, wherewith his palate was much pleasedⁿ.) bathed himself in English blood, whom at this distance of time we may safely term a tyrant, so many murders and massacres were by him committed. For his religion, as yet he was a mangel betwixt a pagan and a Christian; though at last the latter prevailed, especially after his pilgrimage to Rome. In his passage thither he went through France; where understanding that the people paid deep taxes, he disbursed so much of his own money in their behalf, that he brought their taxes to be

^m Others say he was beheaded, (Matt. West. a. 1017. Florence and the Saxon Chronicle, an. 1016. speak of his death as a natural occurrence. Ingulph, f. 5.7. b. Ethelred of Ravaulx, p. 365. Radulfus de Diceto, p. 470, and others, describe it as owing to the treachery of Edric; whereas, according to Malmesbury, the mode of it was uncertain. ⁿ antiquum qui easum extinxerat f. 4. b. Brut. p. 16. mentions two reports similar to those already stated, but asserts that the latter was considered the more probable. These writers also state that Edric was put to death immediately after the murder, but the Saxon Chronicle, and Florence of Worcester, ester, and Malmesbury; say it a year later. Edric was slain in the palace, and his body cast over the city walls, remaining unburned in compliance with Canute's order who had dreaded his power and his treachery. Malmesbury says he was first strangled, then thrown out of the palace windows into the Ther. f. 4. Yet according to an early and contemporary author, Canute commanded Ego to cut off Edric, who at once struck off his head with a battle-axe. Edric. Ego. p. 17. The discrepancies of the different chroniclers are noted by Bell Isborn, in the Ang. Sc. I. 23.

^o Dalton's Polydore, p. 112.

abated to one half^o; an act of pity in a prince without precedent done to foreigners. It is vain for the English to wish the like courtesy from the king of France; partly because England lies not in their way to Rome, partly because they are fuller of compliments than courtesy.

6. Coming to Rome Canutus turned convert, ^{He goeth} changing his condition with the climate, shewing there many expressions of devotion. Much he gave to the pope, and something he gained from him; namely, an immunity for archbishops, from their ex-

^o Radulph. de Diceto, col. 468. Johannes Bromton, col. 912. [Fuller has certainly misunderstood the charity of Canute, which did not consist in redeeming the taxes of the French nation, but in buying up and lessening the tolls which were exacted from pilgrims passing from England through France in their way to Rome. This will be seen by referring to the letter of Canute himself, published in Ingulph and Flor. of Worcester, and Malmsbury, a. 1031. From these authors the other chroniclers have derived their accounts. In this letter Canute says; "Locutus sum igitur cum ipso imperatore [Conrado] et domino papa et principibus qui ibi erant de necessitatibus totius populi universi regni mei tam Anglorum quam Danorum, ut eis concederetur lex aequior et pax securior in via Romam adeundi, et ne tot clausuris per viam arcentur et properentur inustum fatigentur;

" tur ; annuitque postulatis imperator et Robertus rex [sc. Francorum] qui maxime ipsarum clausurarum dominatur. Cunctique principes edictis firmaverunt ut homines mei, tam mercatores quam alii, orandi causa viatores, absque omni angaria clausuram et theloniariorum firmam pace et justa lege securi Romam eant et redeant."

At the request of Offa king of Mercia, Charlemagne permitted pilgrims to pass through France to Rome without paying toll and custom (Malmsb. f. 17.) For some very striking passages in the history of Canute, and the fervour of his devotion, see the remarks of an eyewitness in the Encomium Emmæ, p. 173. His character, which united in itself all the virtues and vices of the barbarian, is also well drawn by Saxo Grammaticus in his Hist. Dan. p. 192 sq., with the notes of Stephanus, ed. 1644. fol.]

A.D. 1035. cessive charges about their pall, and some other 15 ^{to} Canuti. favours he obtained for his subjects. After his Returneth improved in return into his own country he laid out all the devotion. remainder of his days in acts of charity, in founding or enriching of religious houses, and two especially, St. Bennet's in the Holm in Norfolk, and Hyde-abbey near Winchester.

A.D. 1035. 7. To this latter he gave a cross so costly for the
 The para- metal, and curious for the making, that one year's mount cross revenues of his crown was expended on the same.¹

But the cross of this cross was, that about the reign of king Henry the Sixth² it was burnt down, with the whole monastery, in a fire which was very suspicious to have been kindled by intentional malice.³
 This Canutus towards the latter end of his reign never wore a crown, resigning up the same to the image of our Saviour: he was also famous for a particular act of humility done by him on this occasion.

Commands the new. 8. A parasite (and sooner will an hot May want flies than a king's court such flatterers) sought to puff up king Canutus with an opinion of his purulence; as if, because England and Norway, therefore Jolus and Neptune must obey him. In con-futing of whose falsehood, Canutus commanded his chair of state to be set on the seashore, nigh North-

¹ These favours are those mentioned in the previous note.

² Camden's Britannia in Hantsshire, p. 192.

³ Perhaps an oversight for Henry I. This cross and monastery were burnt in the civil wars which raged during Stephen's reign, in 1141, when

Henry of Blois, the bish. of Winchester, set fire to that city. See a description of this costly offering, and the burning of the city, in John of Worcester's Continuatio & Fi-
 Florence of Worcester p. 343;
 Will. Malmesbury, p. 173.

⁴ Idem ibidem

ampton, and settled himself thereon. Then he im- A.D. 1035.
periously commanded the waves (as a fence which ¹⁹ Canuti.
walled that land belonging unto him) to observe their due distance, not presuming to approach him.
The surly waves were so far from obeying him, they But in vain.
heard him not; who listened only to the proclamation of a higher monarch, *Hither shalt thou come,
and no further!*; and made bold to give the king's feet so coarse a kiss, as wetted him up to the knees^v.

9. On this accident king Canutus made an excel- His sermon lent sermon: first, adoring the infinite power of God, thereon.
sole commander of the winds and waves; secondly, confessing the frailty of all flesh, unable to stop the least drop of the sea; thirdly, confuting the profaneness of flatterers, fixing an infinite power in a finite creature. As for the laws made by king Canutus, His laws we have purposely omitted them: not so much <sup>why omitted.</sup> because many, large, and ordinarily extant, but chiefly because most of civil concernment^w.

10. Two of his sons succeeded him, more known ^{Harold} by their handsome surnames, than any other desert. ^{Harefoot} First his base son, (taking advantage of his brother's ^{succeeded} absence,) called from his swiftness Harold Harefoot ^{A.D. 1035.} belike; another Asahel in nimbleness^x, but hare's-heart had better befit his nature, so cowardly his disposition. Then his legitimate son, called Hardy- A.D. 1040.
Canute, more truly bloody Canute, eminent for his ^{1 Hardy} cruelty^y. With him expired the Danish royal line ^{Canuti.} Then Har_{dyCanutus.}

^t Job xxxviii. 11.

and was buried at Winton.

^v Hen. Huntingdon, [p. 209. Flor. Wigorn. in an.]

Radulf de Diceto, col. 469.]

^x 2 Sam. ii. 18.

^w [He died at Shaftesbury on Wednesday Nov. 12, 1035,

^y [William of Malmesbury mentions a report that Harold

A.D. 1040. in England, leaving no issue behind him, and opening an opportunity for the banished son of King Ethelred to recover the crown, whose ensuing reign is richly worth our description. Meantime it is worth our observing, in how few years the Danish greatness shrank to nothing; and from formidable, became inconsiderable, yea contemptible. Indeed Canute was one of extraordinary worth, and the wheel once moved will for a time turn of itself. Had Harold his son (by what way it skilled not) been one of a tolerable disposition, he might have traded in reputation, on the stock of his father's was the son of Canute by Ælfgiva, daughter of count Elfelmus. (De Gestis, f. 42, b. Flor. Wigorn. a. 1035.) And although this Harold is frequently branded with the stigma of illegitimacy by our chroniclers, he was in all probability illegitimate in no other sense, than as having been born previous to Canute's possession of the English crown; and consequently was not considered as the rightful heir, no uncommon thing in those days. These facts seem distinctly traceable in the varying statements of the monkish writers. "Haroldum filium Ælfgivam sed diffinitem fictum filium" regis Canuti. Ingulph p. 61. When Ælfgiva was married to Canute, she stipulated that none other than her own children should succeed. "Decibet utrum in obitu quidam rex filius fuisse, sive hereditas patrigni. Eneam. Eng. p. 17." Yet in the Chron. of Malmesb. a. 1035, it is stated that Canute appointed Harold to succeed him in England. Harold took the western part of the island being supported in his claims by most of the Danes, and by the Londoners, who had almost degenerated into barbarism from the familiarity with the Danes. (Malmesb. f. 42, b.) Ælfgiva was to reside at Winchester, and govern the southern parts of the island in the right of her son Hardy-Canute. But in the year 1037, his brother still lingering in Denmark, Harold, partly by his own activity, partly by the influence of the treasures which he had seized at Winchester on the death of his father, caused himself to be proclaimed king of England and banished Ælfgiva. He dying at Oxford in 1040, the English nobles sent a deputation to his brother Hardy-Canute, who succeeded him. See the Sac. Chron. and Flor. Wigorn. a. 1035—1040. Malmesb. f. 43.)

¹ Hardy
Canuti.

memory. But being so very mean, (considerable ^{A. D. 1040.} only in cruelty,) his father's worth did him the disadvantage to render his unworthiness the more conspicuous. Besides, when Hardy-Canute his brother succeeded him, and though better born, shewed himself no better bred in his inhuman carriage; it caused not only a nauseation in the people of England of Danish kings, but also an appetite, yea a longing after their true and due sovereign.

11. Edward the Confessor, youngest son of king ^{A. D. 1042.} ¹ Edvardi ² Ethelred, (his elder brethren being slain, and their ³ Confessoris. ⁴ Edward the Con- children fled away,) came to be king of England². ⁵ the Con- fessor be- comes king of England. I understand not the ceremony which I read was used to this Edward, whilst as yet, saith a monkish author, properly enough in his own language^a, he was "contained in the weak cloisters of his mother's womb;" at which time the peers of the land sware allegiance unto him or her (the sex as yet being unknown) before he was born. Indeed I find that Varanes his child was crowned king whilst yet in his mother's body, applicata ad uterum corona^b. But what solemnity soever was done to this Hans-en-Kelder, it did not afterwards embolden him to the anticipation of the crown, attending till it descended upon him^c.

^a [He was consecrated at Winchester April 3, 1043. Flor. Wigorn., Sax. Chron. in an.]

^b Father Hierome Porter in the Flowers of the Lives of the Saints, p. 2.

^c Agathias [De Imp. Justinianni, lib. iv. p. 135. ed. Paris 1660.]

^c [From this period to the establishment of William the Conqueror our history is involved in much obscurity and confusion: how to discover the truth between the conflicting statements of the Norman and Saxon writers, seems next to a hopeless task.

Thus much however seems clear; that king Edward was

A.D. 1042. 12. A worthy king, no less pious to God, than Edward Confessor, just to man: for whereas formerly there were manifold laws in the land, made, some by the Britons, others by the Danes, others by the English, swelling to an unmeasurable number, to the great mischiefs The original of our common laws

much attached to the Normans, who had befriended him in his exile, and not only sent for them into this kingdom, but bestowed upon them some of the highest offices of the state. At the very commencement of his reign he made a Norman bishop of London, and shortly after archbishop of Canterbury; next choosing his own chaplains from that nation, whom he afterwards promoted to different sees. Malmsb. f. 45. Ingulph. p. 62. In his reign likewise the customs and language of the Normans began to prevail, particularly at the court.

"Rex autem Edwardus" (says Ingulph. who had been much about the court) "natus in Anglia sed nutritus in Normannia et diutissime immoratus pene in Gallicum transierat, adducens ac attrahens de Normannia plurimos quos variis dignitatibus promotis in immensum exaltabat
 "Principis inter eos erat Robertus montanus Gemme-tieensis, factus per eum episcopus Londoniensis postea in archiepiscopum Cantuari-riensem elevatus et Willielmus et Witchirus regis ca-pallia Capit. ergo tota
 terra sub rege et sub aliis Normannis introducta. Angeli constituti dimicato et Fran-

"corum mores in multis et
 "tari, Gallicum scilicet et ea
 "omnes magnates in eis et
 "tanquam magnum gressu
 "tium loqui, chartas et cetera
 "grapha sua more Francorum
 "confidere et proprietates
 "suetudinem in his et in aliis
 "multis erubescere." Hist.
Croyland. an. 1043; Cf. Malmsb.
 f. 45. The foreigners, who conducted themselves ~~without~~ with moderation nor discretion, were opposed by earl Godwin and his family, agitated by feelings of nakedness as well as ambition. But the Normans so far prevailed with king Edward, as completely to withdraw his countenance from Godwin, to whom he was indebted for the crown and whose daughter he had married, that he ordered the earl and his family into banishment, and sent his wife to a nunnery at Wherwell in Hampshire. Flor. Wigorn. p. 413. 414. The earl, who was as excellent an orator as he was a soldier, and at the same time very popular with his countrymen, did not fail to collect an army in order to fight himself, but the matter was compromised without coming to a battle, although there can be little doubt but that Godwin would have had the upper-

of his subjects, he caused some few of the best to be selected, and the rest, as captious and unnecessary, to be rejected. Hence, say some, they were called the common laws, as calculated for the common good, and no private person's advantage.

13. It is admirable how the Danes in this king's reign were vanished away. They who formerly could scarce be numbered in England, they were so many, could now scarce be numbered they were so few, and those living quietly with their English neighbours. As for foreign invading Danes in this king's reign, as I cannot see them, so I will not seek them, glad of their room and riddance. Indeed once I meet with an assay of them in a navy bound to infest England: but their king being casually drowned as he entered his own fleet, put an end to their hopes, and our fears for that design.

14. Emma, king Edward's mother, being suspected too familiar with Ælfwine bishop of Winchester, under the colour of devotion, put herself to be tried ority; so at least we may infer from the terms upon which the quarrel was compromised. For all the Normans were banished, the queen was restored, and Godwin and his family taken into favour. The next year Godwin died; in what way, may be best narrated in the words of Florence:

“ Godwino comiti, more so“ lito, regi ad mensam asse“ denti supra-^{ma} evenit cala“ mitas. Gravi etenim morbo
“ ex improviso percussus mu-“ tus in ipsa sede declinavit.
“ Quod filii ejus comes Haral“ dus, Tosti et Gyrth videntes, “ illum in regis cameram por-

“ tabant, sperantes eum post “ modicum de infirmitate con-“ valescere. Sed ille expers “ virium, quinta post hæc feria “ miserabilⁱ cruciatu vita de-“ cessit et in veteri monasterio “ sepultus est.” an. 1054. Such is the good plain-sense account of Florence; which almost all subsequent writers, particularly the Normans, distorted into the marvellous. Indeed Florence, assisted by the Saxon Chronicle and Ingulph, seems to be almost the only writer we can follow with safety in this perplexed period of our history.]

A.D. 1046. by ordeal; whereof this the manner^d. Nine ploughshares glowing hot were laid on the ground, one foot distant from another; the party suspected was to be brought blindfolded, and barefooted to pass over them; if he chanced to step in the intervals, or on the hot iron unhurt, he was pronounced innocent, otherwise condemned for an offender. An unjust law, wherein the triers had no precept, the tried no promise. Must innocence be ruined as often as malice would wrong it, if miracle would not rescue it? This was not a way to try man, but tempe God: as just a trying by fire, as that of our modern witches by water. This trial queen Emma admirably underwent, not sensible of the ploughshares till past them, saying to such as led her, "Oh! when shall I come to the place of my purgation?"

Queen
Emma her miraculous purgation.

15. By what power this was performed, I will not dispute, finding amongst the heathens a city Feromia, twenty miles from Rome, under mount Soracte, where the inhabitants, possessed with a spirit of a deity therein worshipped, usually walked upon burning coals without any harm^e. Only I wonder, that bishop Elswine (equally suspected, and equally innocent with Emma) should not proffer himself to the like trial. But, perchance, the prudent prelate remembered that such barbarous customs, though kept up amongst the common people, were forbidden by the ancient canons, as also by the letter of pope Stephen [Archbishop Parker's Antiq. p. 145. See also Godwin De Presul. p. 56, who justly discredits the whole story, which is evidently of modern growth, and is found neither in the Saxon Chron. Flavioce of Worcester or Ingulph]

[Strab. Geog. lib. 7. pp. 146.
ed. Amstel. 1737.] et Pla.
Nat. Hist. vii. 2

the Fifth^f, which about the year eight hundred eighty A.D. 1046 and seven he wrote to Humbert bishop of Mentz: ^{1 Edwardi Confessoris} and now Emma, who went willingly on this sad errand, did the business for them both, and cleared their credits. The church of Winchester got well hereby, viz. nine manors, which queen Emma bestowed thereon, in commemoration of her deliverance.

16. King Edward the Confessor was married to ^{A wife no} wife. the devout lady Edith; his wife in mind, but not in body; in consent, not act; being only (as my author saith) an Abishag to the king^g. Strange! that two persons, if loving each other in the prime of their years, should light on so happy a temper, as mutually to warm, not to heat one another; which the wise men in our age will account difficult, and the wanton impossible. Such will say, if this was true, that king Edward passed as great a trial as queen Emma his mother; and that his ordeal was as hard as hers was painful.

17. Was it not pity but the world should have ^{Yet, was} ~~there not a~~ cause? mo of the breed of them, who were so godly a couple? Let baseness be barren, and cruelty childless; pious persons deserve a double portion in that charter of fruitfulness, Multiply and increase^h. Yea, the English crown now wanting an heir, and, for default thereof likely to fall to foreigners, might (I will not say have tempted, but) have moved king Edward to the knowledge of his wife. But whilst papists cry up this his incredible contingency, others easily unwonder the same, by imputing it partly to

^f [See Bale's Acta Rom. ^g [Ailred in vita Edwardi, Pontif. p. 136. ed. 1615.] ^h Gen. i. 28. p. 378.]

A.D. 1051, his impotence, afflicted with an infirmity, partly to ⁹ Edvardi Confessoris. the distaste of his wife, whom he married only for conveniency, and to the distrust of her chastity, on suspicion whereof he confined her to the monastery of Whorwell (as I take it) in Hampshire¹.

The good daughter of a bad
 father.

18. But grant queen Edith a chaste woman, as she is generally believed; daughter she was to a wicked father, earl Godwin by name, whence the proverb,

Sicut spina rosam, genuit Godwinus Editham.

From prickly stock as springs a rose,

So Edith from earl Godwin grows.

Little ill being written of the daughter, and no good ¶ (Ingulph (a. 1043.) and other chroniclers very generally agree in commanding the beauty and accomplishment of Edith. Ingulph, who knew her well, gives the following story of the queen's notice of him when a boy: "Vidi ego illam multotiens, cum patrem meum in regi curia morante adhuc puer inviserem, et sepius mihi de scholis vimenti de literis ac versu meo opponebat cum occurserem, et libertissime de grammatica soliditatem ad logicam levitatem, qua callebat, declinans, cum argumentorum subtili ligamine me conclusisset, sen per tribus aut quatuor numeros per ancidulam numeratis ad regnum penum transmisit et refectum dimisit." p. 62 ed. 1684. But the testimony of William of Merton² is very remarkable, and strongly corroborates the opinion of Flavel. That writer says, p. 43. "Non multo post

" Editham filiam Godwinum
 " rex in coniugium acceptum
 " feminam in cujus pectore
 " omnium liberalium artium
 " esset gymnasium sed parvum
 " in mundanis rebus regis esse.
 " quam cum videtur, si litteras
 " stuperes, modestiam certe
 " animi et speciem corpoream
 " desiderares. Hoc etiam
 " marito et mortuo predicto esse
 " picione non caruit, sed tra-
 " riens tempore regis Willielmi
 " jurejurando astantibus de
 " perpetua integritate ultra es-
 " tisfecit. Nuptiam utra res hac
 " arte tractabat ut pre traxo
 " amoverit nec virili macto ega-
 " nosceret. Quid an fuisse
 " illius odio, quid predilectio
 " dissimilabat propter per-
 " amore castitatis fecerit pro
 " certo compertum non habemus.
 " Illud celeberrime fertur, quod
 " quam illum cuiusquam vir-
 " eris contubernio predictus
 " fuisse.

¹ Ingulph Hist. Cray. p. 43.

of the father. Indeed king Edward was father-in-law A.D. 1051. ridden, who feared earl Godwin rather than trusted ⁹ Edvardi Confessoris. him, as who with a long train of his power could sweep many dependents after him. Thus Godwin, like those sands near Kent which bear his name, never spared what he could spoil, but swallowed all which came within his compass to devour. Two instances whereof, because both belonging to church-matters, we will relate.

19. He cast a covetous eye on the fair nunnery of Godwin's Berkley in Gloucestershire, and thus contrived it for ^{device to} get Berk- himself. ley nunnery. He left there an handsome young man, really or seemingly sick, for their charity to recover; who quickly grows well and wanton. He is toying, tempting, taking; such fire and flax quickly make a flame. The sisters lose their chastity, and, without taking wife in the way, are ready to make mothers. The young man, if sick, returns to earl Godwin in health, leaving the healthful nuns sick behind him. The fame hereof fills the country, flies to court, is complained of by earl Godwin to the king; officers are sent to inquire, they return it to be true, the nuns are turned out, their house and lands forfeited, both bestowed on earl Godwin; surprised weakness being put out, and designing wickedness being placed in the room thereof. Surely king Edward knew nothing of Godwin's deceit herein; otherwise it was unjust that the whores should be punished, and the principal pander rewarded.

20. At another time he had a mind to the rich ^{Another} manor of Boseham. manor of Boseham in Sussex, and complimented it ^{trick to} gain the out of Robert archbishop of Canterbury in this manner. Coming to the archbishop, he saith, Da mihi basium, that is, "Give me a buss," or a kiss, an holy kiss, perchance, as given, but a crafty one ~~so~~ taken: for Godwin presently posts to Boreham, and takes possession thereof. And though here was neither real intention in him who passed it away, nor valuable consideration to him, but a mere circumvention, yet such was Godwin's power, and the archbishop's poorness of spirit, that he quietly enjoyed it. Nor have I ought else to observe either of Berkley or Boreham, but that both these rich and ancient manors, earl Godwin his brace of cheats, and distant an hundred miles each from other, are now both met in the right honourable George Berkley, ~~so~~ heir apparent thereof, the paramount Miserere of my studies: whose ancestors as they were long since justly possessed of them, so I doubt not but their posterity will long comfortably enjoy them¹.

A.D. 1051. usual favour from such a prelate. The archbishop ⁹ ~~Edwardi~~ ^{Confessoris} returns, Do tibi basium, kissing him therewith. An

21. The monks that wrote this king Edward's life had too heavy a hand in overspieing it with marmes, which hath made the relation too hot for the mouth of any moderate belief. A poor cripple

A miracle reported done by king Edward.

¹ Of course all unfavourable rumours respecting Godwin, proceeding from Norman authority, must be received with suspicion. His principal fault was apparently too great inattention: it might not be unalloyed with ambition in resisting Edward's efforts to Normanise this land, and throw all his influence into the hands of Norman nobles. See particularly M. de la Roche, b.

But then I have got these tales from which are a disgrace to his history¹ I cannot tell. They are not even hinted at by any of the early writers, not even by the Norman chroniclers, who would not have failed to avail themselves of so good a charge against Godwin.

Not to say that the full colour play upon the word Boreham is absurd; for instance when at that time the word was pronounced and written Bosen had: chanced to come to him, one who might have stocked a whole hospital with his own maladies. It was questionable whether the difficulty of his crawling caused more pain, or the deformity thereof more shame unto him. The sight of him made all tender beholders cripples by sympathy, commiserating his sad condition. But it seems this weak wretch had a strong fancy and bold face, who durst desire the king himself to carry him on his back into the church, on assurance, as he said, that thereby he should be recovered. The good king grants his desire, and this royal porter bears him into the church, where so strange an alteration is said to happen; qui renit quadrupes, decessit bipes, “he that ‘came on all four, departed straight and upright.’”

¹ Fuller's account is derived from Aldredus Abbas Rievulensis

22. The church into which the king carried the cripple was St. Peter’s in Westminster, built by him on this occasion. King Edward had made a vow to visit the relics of St. Peter in Rome; and, because his subjects could not safely spare him out of his own country, the pope dispensed with him for the performance thereof. Now, although he went not to St. Peter, St. Peter came to him, and in several apparitions advised him to build him a church in the place now called Westminster, then Thorney, because desolate, and overgrown with thorns and briers. Nor is it any news, that populous cities at this present were anciently woods and bushy plots. What else was Jerusalem itself in the days of Abraham but a thorny, when in the midst thereof on mount Moriah, a ram was caught by the horns in a de vita et miraculis Edwardi Confessoris, published in Twysden’s Decem Scriptores, p. 369. Ailred flourished in the middle of the twelfth century.]

A.D. 1051.
Edwardi Confessoris.

9 Edwardi Confessoris.

A.D. 1061.
Westmin-ster church rebuilt by him.

A.D. 1061. thicket.¹ This church many years before had been 19 ^{Edvardi} dedicated to, and, as the monks say, consecrated by ^{Confessoris.}

— St. Peter, till destroyed by the Danes, king Edward raised it from the ruins, endowing it with large privileges and rich possessions.²

A ring said to be sent from St.
John to king Edward.

23. Next to St. Peter, our Edward's darling, he is said to be most in favour with St. John the apostle, who is reported to have appeared unto him in the shape of a begging pilgrim; the king, not having at the present money to supply his wants, plucked off his ring from his finger, and bestowed it upon him. This very ring, some years after, St. John sent him back again by two pilgrims out of Palestine; but withal telling him, that he should die within six months after: a message more welcome than the ring to such a mortified man. If any doubt of the truth thereof, it is but riding to Havering in Essex, so called, as they say, from this ring³, where, no doubt, the inhabitants will give any sufficient satisfaction therein.

A vision worth observing

24. Amongst the many visions in this king's reign, one I will not omit, because seeming to have somewhat more than mere monk therein. One being inquisitive what should become of England after king Edward's death, received this answer: "The kingdom of England belongeth to God himself, who will provide it a king at his pleasure." Indeed England is God's on several titles: first, as a country; the earth is his, and the fulness thereof; secondly, as an island, which are God's demesnes.

¹ Gen. xxvii. 13.

² Thorne. Chron. ed. 1778. 1.

³ Built by a Londoner at the instigation of king Ethelbert about the year 618. Will.

¹ Camden's Britan in Essex. (p. 319.)

which he keeps in his own hand of his daily provi- A.D. 1061.
dence ; thirdly, as a kingdom on which he hath ¹⁹ Edvardi Confessoris.
bestowed miraculous deliverances. Seeing then England is his own, we know who said, Is it not lawful to do what I will with mine own^m? May he dispose of his own to his own glory, and the good of his own servants.

25. Amongst the many resplendent virtues in king King Edward, contempt of wealth was not the least, <sup>King Edward's contempt of wealth.</sup> whereof some bring in this for an instance. The king lay on a pallet surrounded with curtains ; by him stood a chest of silver, which Hugolin his treasurer, called away on some sudden occasion, had left open. In comes a thievish courtier, takes away as much money as he could carry, and disposeth thereof.
Then cometh he the second time for a new burden, little suspecting that the unseen king saw him all the while, and having laden himself, departed. Some add, he returned the third time. “ Be content “(quoth the king) with what you have, lest, if Hu“golin come in and catch you, he take it all from “you.” Soon after the treasurer returning, and fretting for loss of the money, “ Let him have it “quietly (said the king), he needeth it more than “we do.” Words which spake him a better man than king, as accessory to his own robbing ; who, if pleased to have made this pilfering fellow to have tasted of the whip for his pains, had marred a pretty jest, but made a better earnest thereinⁿ.

26. Posterity conceived so great an opinion of King Edward's piety, that his clothes were deposited <sup>King Edward's wardrobe</sup> in Ingulph, p.

^m Matt. xx. 15.

cated instance in Ingulph, p.

ⁿ [Ailred de vita Edwardi, 65.]
p. 376. See a better authenti-

A.D. 1061 amongst the regalia, and solemnly worn by our English kings on their coronation; never counting themselves so fine as when invested with his robes; the ^{19 Edwardi Confessoris.} ~~put into the regalia.~~ sanctity of Edward the first wearer excusing, yet adorning the modern antiqueness of his apparel. Amongst these is the rod or sceptre, with a dove on the top thereof, the emblem of peace, because in his reign England enjoyed haleyon days, free from Danish invasions: as also his crown, chair, staff, tunic, close pall, tuisni hosen, sandals, spurs, gloves, &c.⁹ Expect not from me a comment on these several clothes, or reason for the wearing of them. In general, it was to mind our kings, when habited with his clothes, to be clothed with the habit of his virtuous endowments; as when putting on the gloves of this confessor, their hands ought to be like his in moderate taking of taxes from their subjects. Indeed, impositions once raised are seldom remitted, pretended necessities being always found out for their continuance. But our Edward released to his subjects the grievous burden of Dane-gelt, payed to his predecessors, conceiving it fit, now the Danes were departed, that the gelt or tax should go after them¹⁰. But now Edward's staff is broken, chair overturned, clothes rent, and crown melted; our present age esteeming them the relics of superstition.

No confessor in the strictness of the word

27. And yet all things being cast up, I confess I understand not how the name confessor is proper to king Edward, in the strict acceptance thereof. For a confessor is one actually persecuted for the testimony of the truth, and prepared to lose his life for

⁹ See M. J. S. Catalogue of Vol. 161.
¹⁰ However, see Note, p. 161. See Ingulph, Ad

the same. He is a martyr in bullion, wanting only A. D. 1061.
 the stamp of a violent death to be impressed upon ¹⁹ Edvardi Confessoris.
 him. Now a great part of our Edward's life was led by him in peace and plenty; nothing bounding his abundance but his own moderation, and for twenty years together having no visible foe to offend him. And although in his youth he lived in Normandy, in a middle condition, betwixt an exile and a traveller, flying thither for fear of the Danes, yet such his sufferings were of civil concernment, not directly relating to conscience, though at distance reducible thereunto. But seeing in the titles of great persons it is better to give too much than too little, a confessor we found him, and a confessor we leave him.

28. Our eyes have been so intent in beholding ^{Stigand the} the virtues of this king, we have been little at leisure ^{vicious} to take notice of the archbishops of Canterbury ^{archbishop} ^{of Canterbury} ^{bury.} during his reign. Know then that about ten years since, Robert archbishop of Canterbury, who succeeded Eadsy therein, fearing some hard measure from earl Godwin, notwithstanding he had been contentedly kissed out of his manor of Boseham, conveyed himself away beyond the seas to his monastery in Normandy, whence he came first into England^{q.} After whose departure, Stigand bishop of Winchester intruded himself into that see, eminent only for vice and sordid covetousness.

29. As for the ecclesiastical laws made by this King Edward's ec-
 king in his reign, it will be enough to affix their ^{clesiastical} principal titles. <sup>constitutions.</sup>

^q [He was outlawed with favour. See p. 374, n. Sax.
 other Normans, on occasion of Chron. an. 1052.]
 earl Godwin being restored to

A.D. 1061. i. That every clerk and scholar should quickly
 19 Edwardi
 Confessoris. enjoy their goods and possessions.

— ii. What solemn festivals people may come and go of, without any lawsuits to disturb them.

— iii. That in all courts where the bishops' priests doth appear, his case is first to be heard and determined.

— iv. That guilty folk flying to the church should there have protection, not to be reprendered by any but by the bishop and his ministers.

— v. That tithes be paid to the church of sheep, bees, and the like.

— vi. How the ordeal was to be ordered for the trial of guilty persons by fire and water.

— vii. That Peter-pence, or Romescot, be faithfully paid to the pope.

But I lose time, and refer the reader to read these constitutions at large, being three and twenty in number, in the worthy work of that no less learned than religious knight, sir Henry Spelman.

A.D. 1066. 30. And now the full time was come when a How the kings of England
 come to cure the king's evil

good king Edward exchanged this life for a better.
 Who, as he was famous for many personal miracles,
 so he is reported to have entailed, by heaven's consort, an hereditary virtue on his successors the kings of England, only with this condition, that they continue constant in Christianity, to cure the king's evil.¹ This disease, known to the Greeks by the name of Asyndes, termed by Latins cruxis, and

¹ In his Council at Winchester for the year 1066, Wilkins, I. 31. Madox, De Gestis, 1. 1.

The Practoscopus de vulgo. According to the report of the medical men of that age, could be cured by his touch only. See the first and other diseases besides the cruxis of king Edward touch.

scrophulae, hath its cause from phlegm, its chief and common outward residence, in or near the neck and throat, where it expresseth itself in knobs and kernels, pregnant oftentimes with corrupted blood and other putrified matter, which on the breaking of those bunches floweth forth, equally offensive to sight, smell, and touch. And yet this noisome disease is happily healed by the hands of the kings of England stroking the sore: and if any doubt of the truth thereof, they may be remitted to their own eyes for further confirmation. But there is a sort of men, who to avoid the censure of over-easy credulity, and purchase the repute of prudent austerity, justly incur the censure of affected frowardness. It being neither manners nor discretion in them, in matters notoriously known, to give daily experience the lie, by the backwardness of their belief*.

31. But whence this cure proceeds is much controverted amongst the learned. Some recount it in the number of those ἀναπόδεικτα, whose reason cannot be demonstrated. For as in vicious common-

* [It will appear strange that Fuller should have been attacked for throwing discredit upon this miraculous cure. See The Appeal, &c. part 1. p. 55, and part 11. p. 22. That some effect was produced is certain from the testimony of many respectable witnesses: nor is it probable that this ceremony would have continued so long, had its effects been merely imaginative. Fuller is guilty of a slight mistake respecting the collect, which does not consist of any portion of scripture. The form of the service, which is brief, will be found in The Appeal, &c.

p. 23, and in Heylyn's Examen. Historicum, p. 47, from which it is taken. Till the time of James I., the custom had been for the king to make the sign of the cross over the tumour, by whom it was laid aside, and ordered to be expunged from the service. See H. Le Strange Alliances of Divine Offices, p. 250. And The Appeal, ib. This pretension to the gift of healing was first laid aside by queen Anne; yet prince Charles, son of the Pretender, touched for the evil in the celebrated year 1745; successfully according to some Scottish writers.]

^{A.D. 1066.}
²⁴ Edvardi Confessoris.

Several
opinions of the causes
thereof.

A. D. 1666. wealthis bastards are frequent, who being reputed
 24 Edwardi
 Confessoris. filii populi, have no particular father: so man's ignorance increaseth the number of occult qualities which I might call chances in nature, where the effect is beheld, but cannot be certainly referred to any immediate and proper cause thereof. Others impute it to the power of fancy, and an exalted imagination¹. For when the poor patient (who perchance seldom heard of, and never saw a king before shall behold his royal hand dabbling in a puddle of putrefaction, and with a charitable confidence rubbing, smoothing, chafing those loathsome kerries which I may call clouds of corruption, dissolved ofttimes into a feulant shower, I say, when the sick man shall see an hand so humble of an arm so high,

 such condescension in a king, to stroke that sore,
 at which meaner persons would stop their nostrils,
 shut their eyes, or turn their faces: this raiseth erecteth, enthroneth the patient's fancy, summoning his spirits to assist nature with their utmost might,
 to encounter the disease with greater advantage.
 And who will look into the legend of the miracles of imagination, shall find many strange and almost incredible things thereby really effected.

Others count it wth
 perswth Peucerus², though acquitting this cure from dia-魔ical conjuration, yet tax it as guilty of superstition.
 With him all such do side as quarrel at the cermonies and circumstances used at the healing of this malady. Either displeased at the collect read, consisting of the first nine verses of the Gospel of

¹ Aug. Ferrenus. Veritatem de diabolico methodo. (1574. ed. 1574.)

² Comment. de principiis
 Divinationum generibus. p
 162. ed. 1591.)

St. John^u, as wholly improper, and nothing relating to the occasion, or unresolved of the efficacy of the gold pendent about the patients' neck, (whether partly completing, or a bare complement of the cure,) or secretly unsatisfied what manner and measure of belief is required, according to the model whereof health is observed to come sooner or later, or openly offended with the sign of the cross^w, which was used to be made by the royal hands on the place infected. All which exceptions fall to the ground, when it shall be avowed, that notwithstanding the omission of such ceremonies, as requisite rather to the solemnity than substance of the cure, the bare hands of our kings (without the gloves, as I may term it, of the aforesaid circumstances) have effected the healing of this disease.

33. Hereupon some make it a clear miracle, and immediately own God's finger in the king's hand. That when the art of the physician is posed, the industry of the chirurgeon tired out, the experience of both at a loss, when all human means cry craven, then that wound made by the hand of God is cured by the hand of his vicegerent. Hath Heaven endued vegetables (the worst and weakest of living creatures) with cordial qualities? Yea, hath it bestowed precious properties on dull and inanimate waters, stones, and minerals, insomuch that such are condemned for silly or sullen, for stupid or stubborn, as doubt thereof? And shall we be so narrow-hearted as not to conceive it possible that Christian men, the noblest of corporeal creatures, kings, the most eminent

^u [Probably he means the second Gospel, which was taken from John i. 1—14, inclusive.]

^w Guil. Tooker in Charismate, cap. vii. p. 96. [ed. 1597.]

A.D. 1576. of all Christian men, kings of Britain, the first-fruits & Edward of all Christian kings, should receive that peculiar Confessor.

privilege and sanative power, whereof daily instances are presented unto us? See here the vast difference betwixt papists and protestants. How do the former court those miracles which fly from them; and often, in default of real ones, are glad and greedy to hug and embrace empty shadows of things falsely reported to be done, or fondly reputed to be miracles?
 Whereas many protestants, on the contrary, as in the matter in hand, are scrupulous in accepting miracles truly tendered unto them. But although our religion, firmly founded on, and safely fenced with the scriptures, needs no miracles to confirm or contenance the truth thereof, yet when they are by the hand of Heaven cast into our scales, not to make our doctrine weight, but as superfluum, or an overplus freely bestowed: sure they may safely without sin be received, not to say, can scarce be refused, without, at least, some suspicion of neglect and ingratitude to the goodness of God.

The longer
 it now confessing a Catholic.

34. Nor will it be amiss here to relate a passage which happened about the midst of the reign of queen Elizabeth, after pope Pius did let fly his excommunication against her. There was a stiff Roman catholic, (as they delight to term themselves,) otherwise a man well accomplished, and of an ingenuous disposition, who being cast into prison, (I conjecture for his religion,) was there visited in an high degree with the king's evil. And having with great pain and expense, but no success, long used the advice of physicians, at last he humbly addressed him self unto the queen's majesty, by whom, with God's help, he was completely cured. And being demanded, "What “ news?” “ I perceive,” said he, “ now at last by plain ^{A. D. 1066.} “ experience, that the excommunication denounced ²⁴ Edvardi Confessoris.

 “ by the pope against her majesty is in very deed of “ none effect, seeing God hath blessed her with so “ great and miraculous a virtue^{x.}”

35. This mention of queen Elizabeth (there is a Queen Elizabeth why displeased with the people in Gloucestershire.) magnetic virtue in stories for one to attract another) minds me of a passage in the beginning of her reign. Making her progress into Gloucestershire, people affected with this disease did in uncivil crowds press in upon her. Insomuch that her majesty, betwixt anger, grief, and compassion, let fall words to this effect: “ Alas, poor people, I cannot, I cannot “ cure you; it is God alone that can do it!” Which words some interpreted, (contrary to her intent and practice, continuing such cures till the day of her death,) an utter renouncing and disclaiming of any instrumental efficacy in herself. Whereas she only removed her subjects’ eyes from gazing on her, to look up to Heaven. For men’s minds naturally are so dull and heavy, that instead of travelling with their thanks to God, the cause of all cures, they lazily take up their lodging more than half way on this side, mistaking the dealer for the giver of their recovery. It follows not therefore that the queen refused to heal their bodies, because careful in the first place to cure their souls of this dangerous mistake. A princess, who as she was a most exact demander of her due, (observed seldom or never to forgive her greatest favourites what they owed her,) so did she most punctually pay her engagements to others, as to all men, so most especially to God, ^x Guil. Tooker in Charismate, cap. vi. p. 92.

A.D. 1066. loath that he should lose any honour due unto him,
²⁴ Edvardi Confessoris. by her unjust detaining thereof.

The kings of France cure the king's evil. 36. The kings of France share also with those of England in this miraculous cure. And Laurentius reports, that when Francis the First king of France was kept prisoner in Spain, he, notwithstanding his exile and restraint, daily cured infinite multitudes of people of that disease: according to this epigram:

Hispanos inter sanat rex cheradas, estque
Captivus superis gratus ut ante fuit.

The captive king the evil cures in Spain;
Dear, as before, he doth to God remain.

So it seemeth his medicinal quality is affixed, not to his prosperity, but person; so that during his durance he was fully free to exercise the same.

Laurentius falsely denies the kings of England power in curing the king's evil. 37. Thus far we patiently hear, and sufficiently credit this author; but can no longer afford him either belief or attention, when he presumeth to tell us that the kings of England never cured the king's evil, a virtue appropriated only to his majesty of France¹. Only he confesseth, that long ago some of our English kings of the Anjouan race, (descended from Jeffery Plantagenet), did heal the falling sickness with certain consecrated annulets, a custom long since disused. Thus he seeks to deprive our princes of their patrimonial virtue; and to make them reparations (instead of their sanative power, wherof they are peaceably possessed to them and their heirs, holding it of God in chief) with assigning them an old lease, where the title at the best was A. D. 1066.

¹ De mirabilis stramine, setting the ceremony of the intercession, &c. ed. 1670. To king touching for the evil, this book is prefixed a very ² De mirabilis stramine, handsome engraving, representation, &c. 2

litigious, and the term long ago expired. But the ²⁴ Edvardi Confessoris.
reader may be pleased to take notice, that this Laurentius was physician in ordinary to king Henry the Fourth of France, and so had his judgment herein bowed awry with so weighty a relation; flattery being so catching a disease, wherewith the best doctors of physic may sometimes be infected. To cry quits with him, Dr. Tooker, chaplain to queen Elizabeth, in a treatise he wrote of this subject, denieth the kings of France ever originally cured this evil, but per aliquam propaginem^a, by a sprig of right derived from the primitive power of our English kings, under whose jurisdiction most of the French provinces were once subjected.

38. Between these two authors, violent in opposition, haply we may find the truth, whose constant dwelling-place is pleasantly seated in a moderate vale, betwixt two swelling extremes. For it plainly appeareth by uncontrollable arguments and evidences, that both the crowns of England and France have for many years been invested with this miraculous gift; yet so that our English kings are the elder brothers in the possession thereof. For if St. Lewis king of France, who was contemporary with our king Henry the Third, was the first of that royal

^a In his Charismate, cap. vi. p. 84. [Tooker's work was printed many years before that of his opponent, in which this absurdity was first advanced. The controversy had at this time quite changed from its original grounds. For in the time of Malmesbury it was at- tributed generally to king Edwards personal holiness: " non stro tempore quidam falsam insinuant operam, qui asse verant istius morbi curatio nem, non ex sanctitate sed ex regalis prosapia hæreditate fluxisse." De Gest. f. 51.]

A.D. 1066. race which healed this evil^b, his cradle was more
 24 Edwardi
 Confessoris. than one hundred and sixty years after the coffin of our Edward the Confessor, from whom, as is aforesaid, our kings derive this sovereign power by constant succession. But methinks my book in this discourse begins to bunch or swell out, and some will censure this digression for a strenna, or tedious exuberancy, beyond the just proportion of our history; wherefore no more hereof: only I will conclude with two prayers, extending the first to all good people, that Divine Providence would be pleased to preserve them from this painful and loathsome disease. The second I shall confine to myself alone, (not knowing how it will suit with the consciences and judgments of others,) yet so as not excluding any who are disposed to join with me in my petition, namely, that if it be the will of God to visit me, whose body hath the seeds of all sickness, and seed of all sins, with the aforesaid malady, I may have the favour to be touched of his majesty, the happiness to be healed by him, and the thankfulness to be grateful to God the author, and God's image the instrument of my recovery. I will only add this short story, and then proceed. A little before these wars began, a minister (not over-loyally affected) was accused, and was like to have been troubled for this passage in his sermon, that "oppression was the king's evil." But being called to answer it before the commissioners, he expounded his own words, that he meant oppression was the king's evil; or that the king caused it, but only cured it, and alone in this land could remedy and redress the same.

^a See the note Andro de Crecy, a French author, and others.

39. King Edward dying childless, caused by his A.D. 1066.
 affected chastity, left the land at a loss for an heir ^{1 Haroldi.}
 in a direct line, and opened a door to the ambition ^{Harold} of collateral pretenders. Indeed the undoubted ^{usurpeth} right lay in Edgar Aetheling, son to Edward the out- ^{the crown.} law, grandchild to Edmond Ironside king of England ^c: but he being tender in age, and (as it seems) soft in temper, and of a foreign garb, because of his education in Hungary, (his most potent alliance in Germany out of distance to send him seasonable assistance,) was passed by by the English nobility.
 These chose Harold to be king, whose title to the crown is not worth our deriving of it, much less his relying on it^d. But having endeared martialists by his valour, engaged courtiers by his bounty, and obliged all sorts of people by his affability, he was advanced to the crown by those who more considered his ability to defend, than his right to deserve it.

40. William duke of Normandy was competitor ^{William} ^{duke of}

^c [He experienced the fickleness of fortune: for he was chosen king by a party after the death of Harold. Malmsb. De Gestis, f. 52. He was an old man, living retiredly in the country, almost decrepit when Malmsbury wrote his Chronicle, which was as late as the middle of the twelfth century.]

^d [If however the chronicle of Florence of Worcester may be trusted, Harold was the undoubted heir to the throne, and appointed to it by Edward. It is also observable that the expression used by this chronicler to describe Harold's succession is the same with that used to denote the accession of a lawful sovereign:—"Subregulus " Haroldus Godwini ducis fi- " lius, quem rex ante suam " decessionem regni successo- " rem elegerat a totius Angliae " primatibus ad regale culmen " electus." a. 1066. The same is stated in the Hist. Eliensis, ii. 43. ed. Gale; and both agree in commendation of Harold.

According to Malmsbury, he appointed William, who was his cousin, to succeed him. De Gest. f. 52, b.]

A.D. 1066. with Harold, who supplying in number what he wanted in strength of his titles, claimed the crown by alliance, adoption, and donation from Edward the Confessor; though he was as unable to give and bequeath, as William, being a bastard, in the strictness of Saxon laws, was uncapable to receive it. But his sword was stronger than his titles, and the sins of the English more forcible than either, to deliver that nation (now grown, as authors observe, intolerably vicious) into his subjection. So that in a pitched field he overcame and killed king Harold, with the prime of the English nobility: (a just punishment on their perjury for their deserting their lawful prince;) and such as survived were forced either to hold the stirrup, or lackey by the side of many a mean-born Norman, mounted to places of profit and honour. This was the fifth time wherein the south of this island was conquered: first, by Romans; secondly, by Piets and Scots; thirdly, by Saxons; fourthly, by the Danes; and fifthly, by the Normans. This mindeth me of the prophet Elisha's speech to Joash king of Israel: Thou shouldest have smitten Syria five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it. It seemeth five may, but six must dispatch a people. God hath already smitten this island five times with a rod of foreign invasion; let us beware the sixth time, that final, fatal number, for fear it prove the last, and utter confusion and destruction of our nation.

41. Thus king William came in by conquest, though in the latter part of his reign, growing more mild and moderate, he twisted his right of victory

¹ Harold.
Normandy twisteth many weak titles together.

William rebathed his conquering sword with conqueration

with composition : as such who have ravished a woman against her will endeavour afterwards to make her reparation by wooing and wedding her, whom formerly they had wronged ; so with love to cover their lust, by the most excusable way of marriage. So king William, though he had forced this land, yet afterwards, not so much out of remorse as policy, to suppress frequent tumults, and procure security to himself and successors, is said to have closed with the commons in a fair way of agreement, restoring many ancient privileges unto them. Thus, though conquest was more honourable for his credit, composition was comfortable for his conscience, and accounted most safe for his posterity. Witness that judicial sentence which king William in open court pronounced against himself, adjudging the lord of Sharnborn in Norfolk^f, being an Englishman, true owner of that manor, contrary to that grant wherein he had formerly bestowed it on one Warren a Norman. Herein the conqueror confessed himself conquered, submitting his arbitrary power and pleasure to be regulated by justice, and the ancient rights of Englishmen.

42. But what impression the Norman victories made on the state, let politicians observe ; what change it produced in the laws, we leave to the learned of that faculty to prosecute : whilst that church-story is, the manifest change of religion from what formerly was publicly professed in England. To make this mutation in its due time more conspicuous, we will here conclude this book with a brief

^f Caniden's Britannia in Norfolk, [p. 350.]

A. D. 1066. character of the principal doctrines generally taught ^{1 Haroldi.} and believed by the English in these four last centuries, before tainted with any Norman infection. For though we must confess and bemoan that corruptions crept into the church by degrees, and divine worship began to be clogged with superstitions and ceremonies, yet that the doctrine remained still sound and entire, in most material points, will appear by an induction of the dominative controversies wherein we differ from the church of Rome.

I. Scripture generally read.

For such as were with the holy bishop Aidan, clerici et attensi seu laici, either clergy or laity, were used to exercise themselves in reading the holy word, and learning of psalms.

The original preferred.

For Ricemarch a Briton, a right learned and godly clerk^h, son to Sulgen bishop of St. David's, flourishing in this age, made this epigram on those who translated the psalter out of the Greek, so taking it at the second hand, and not drawing it immediately out of the first vessel.

Ebreis nablam custodit litera signis,
 Pro captu quam quisque suo sermone Latino
 Edidit, innumeros lingua variante libellos,
 Ebremque jubar suffuscat nube Latina
 Nam tepefacta serum dant tertia labra caputem
 Sed sacer Hieronymus, Ebro fonte repletus,
 Lucidus nudat verum, breviusque ministrat

^g Bede Eccles. Historia, §.

^h Cardale in Chron. of Cambridge, 1584.
 See the translation of this Chron. published by learned bishop, William Bedell.

Dr. Powell, page 137, note 1.

1584.

MS. in the Library of the learned bishop, William Bedell.

This harp the holy Hebrew text doth tender,
 Which, to their power, whilst every one doth render
 In Latin tongue with many variations,
 He clouds the Hebrew rays with his translations.
 Thus liquors when twice shifted out, and pour'd
 In a third vessel, are both cool'd and sour'd.
 But holy Jerome truth to light doth bring Briefer and fuller, fetch'd from the Hebrew spring.

A.D. 1066.
 1 Haroldi.

No prayers for the dead in the modern notion of papists.

For though we find prayers for the dead, yet they were not in the nature of propitiation for their sins, or to procure relaxation from their sufferings; but were only an honourable commemoration of their memories, and a sacrifice of thanksgiving for their salvation. Thus St. Cuthbert, after he had seen the soul of one Hadwaldus carried by angels into heaven, did celebrate obsequies of prayers in his behalf^k.

Purgatory, though newly hatched, not yet fledged.

For although there are frequent visions and revelations in this age pretended, thereon to build purgatory, which had no foundation in scripture, yet the architects of that fanciful fabric had not so handsomely contrived it, as it stands at this day in the Romish belief. For Bede, out of the vision of Furseus, relateth certain great fires above the air, appointed to examine every one according to the merits of his work, differing from the papist's purgatory^l; which Bellarmine, by the common consent of the schoolmen, determineth to be within the bowels and cited by the archbishop of Armagh in the Religion of the Ancient Irish, p. 9. ^k Bede in Vita Cuthberti, cap. 34. ^l Hist. Eccl. iii. 19.

A. D. 1066. of the earth. Thus nothing can be invented and ^{1 Haroldi.} perfected at once.

Communion under both kinds.

For Bede relateth, that one Hildmer, an officer of Ecgfrid king of Northumberland, entreated our Cuthbert to send a priest that might minister the sacrament of the Lord's body and blood unto his wife, that then lay a dying^m. And Cuthbert himself, immediately before his own departure out of this life, received the communion of the Lord's body and blood. And lest any should fondly hope to decline so pregnant an instance by the novel conceit of comitancy, (a distinction that could not speak, because it was not born in that age,) it is punctually noted, that he distinctly received the cup.

Pocula degustat vita, Christique supinum
 Sanguine munit iter——ⁿ

His voyage steep the easier to climb up,
 Christ's blood he drank out of life's healthful cup.

So that the eucharist was then admitted entire, and not maimed, as it is by papists at this day, serving it, as Hanon the Ammonite did the clothes and beards of David's ambassadors, cutting it off at the middle^o. And though the word mass was frequent in that age, generally expressing all divine service, yet was it not known to be offered as a propitiatory sacrifice for the quick and dead.

The author's engagement to the archbishop of

43. But if any desire further information herein, let him repair to the worthy work, which James the right learned and pious archbishop of Armagh, hath

^m De vita Cuthberti, c. 15.

ⁿ Idem in vita Cuthberti carmine, c. 36. ^o 2 Sam. v. 4.

written of the religion professed by the ancient Irish ^{A. D. 1066.} and British. From whom I have borrowed many a note, (though not always thanking him in the margin by citing his name,) and therefore now must make one general acknowledgment of my engagement.
 In cities we see, that such as sell by retail (though of less credit) are of great use, especially to poor people, in parcelling out pennyworths of commodities to them whose purses cannot extend to buy by wholesale from the merchant. Conceive I in like manner my pains will not be altogether unprofitable, who in this history have fetched my wares from the storehouse of that reverend prelate, the Cape-merchant of all learning, and here in little remnants deliver them out to petty-country-chapmen, who hitherto have not had the hap or happiness to understand the original treasures whence they are taken.
 And clean through this work in point of chronology
 I have with implicit faith followed his computation, setting my watch by his dial, knowing his dial to be set by the sun, and account most exactly calculated, according to the critical truth of time^p. Long may he live for the glory of God, and good of his church.
 For whereas many learned men, though they be deep abysses of knowledge, yet (like the Caspian sea, receiving all, and having no outlet) are loath to impart aught to others; this bright sun is as bountiful to deal abroad his beams, as such dark dales as myself are glad and delighted to receive them.

^p In his book De Brit. Eccl. which work he has given a Primordia. [At the end of chronology of these times.]

SEVERAL COPIES
OF BATTEL ABBEY ROLL.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFUL SIR SIMON ARCHER, OF TAMWORTH IN WARWICKSHIRE.

Some report, that the toad before her death sucks up, if not prevented with sudden surprisal, the precious stone as yet but a jelly) in her head, grudging mankind the good thereof. Such generally the envy of antiquaries, preferring that their rarities should die with them, and be buried in their graves, rather than others receive any benefit thereby.

You cross the current of common corruption: it being questionable whether you be more skilful in knowing, careful in keeping, or courteous in communicating your curious collections in that kind.

Justly therefore have I dedicated these several copies of Battel Abbey roll unto you: first, because I have received one of the most authentic of them from your own hand^a: secondly, because your ancient name charged through and through most of these catalogues. Yea, as the archers came over with the Conqueror, so the Conqueror

^a [Arms: azure, three arrows erect, or, two and one; impaling Ferrers, vairé, or and gules. Sir Simon Archer of Tamworth in co. Warwick, knight, was descended of an ancient family seated there for many generations, being the fourteenth in lineal descent from Robert Archer of Tamworth, by Seldia, daughter and heir of Roger de Hulchall. He was the eldest son and heir of Andrew Archer of Tamworth, esq., by his wife Margaret, daughter of Simon Rawley of Farnborough, co. Wilts, was born in 1583, married Ann, daughter of sir John Ferrers of Tamworth castle, knight, knighted before 1611, and died 1664, in his eighty-first year. See Visitations of Warwickshire, 1619, 1683. By his said wife he had issue, three sons and as many daughters ^B

^b [See p. 429. &c.]

may be said to come over with the archers, (therefore placed in a list by themselves,) because their valour achieved the greatest part of his victory.

ERUSING the worthy pains of grave ^{The design} and godly Mr. Fox, in his Book of ^{proposed} ^{and as-} Martyrs, I find him in the reign of ^{serted.} William the First exemplifying a double catalogue of such eminent persons as came over at the conquest. Now, seeing so reverend a writer accounted the inserting thereof no deviation from his church-history, we presume accordingly, by way of recreation of the reader, to present him with a larger list of those names, with some brief notes thereupon.

Here will I premise nothing about the ancient ^{Imposing} ^{of names} original of names, which argued the undoubted ^{denotes} ^{dominion.} dominion of him who first gave them, over those on whom they were imposed. Thus Eve named Cain^a; to shew the command, even of the mother, over the eldest (and therefore over all her) children. Adam named Eve, she shall be called woman^b; to signify the husband's sovereignty over his wife. God named Adam, Let us make Adam, or man^c; to denote his power and authority over man. And God named himself, I AM hath sent me unto you^d; importing his absolute and independent being in, and from himself. But waving what may be said of the beginning of names, we shall digest what we conceive necessary for our present purpose, into the following propositions:

The first is; surnames were fixed in families in ^{Fixed sur-} _{names not}

^a Gen. iv. 1.

^c Gen. i. 26.

^b Gen. ii. 23.

^d Exod. iii. 14.

D d 2

long before the conquest. I say, fixed. Formerly, though men had surnames, yet their sons did not, as I may say, follow suit with their fathers, the name descended not hereditarily on the family. At or about. Forty years under or over will break no squares. It began somewhat sooner in the Confessor's time, fetched out of France, but not universally settled till some hundred years after. When men therefore tell us how their surnames have been fastened on their families some centuries of years before the conquest, we hear them say so. His chronology was no better than his heraldry, who boasted that his ancestors had given the three gun-holes (which indeed were the three annulets) for their arms these thousand years, when guns themselves have not been extant three hundred years in Europe. The same solecism in effect is committed by such who pretend to the antiquity of surnames before the same were settled in rerum natura.

Surnames late in (because not needful to) kings.

The second; kings had fixed surnames later than common people. Our four first Norman kings had no surnames, Henry the Second being the first of the Plantagenets. Wonder not that a general fashion should come later into the court than into the country, and last to the crown itself. For names being made to distinguish men, they were more necessary for common people, whose obscurities would be lost in a multitude, were they not found out by the sign of their surnames, having no other eminency whereby they might be differenced. But princes (being comparatively few in respect of private persons) are sufficiently discovered by their own lustre, and sovereignty may be said to be a surname to itself; and therefore kings, not of necessity, but mere pleasure, have accepted additions to their Christian names.

The third ; many who came over out of Normandy were noble in their native country. Especially such who are styled from their places, as le sire de Sote-ville, le sire de Margneville, le sire de Tancarville, &c., whereby we understand them lords and owners of such manors, towns, and castles from whence they took their denomination. However, this particle de such a place (when without le sire going before it) doth not always give “livery and seisin,” and presently put the person so named into possession of the place ; sometimes barely importing that he was born there, and not owner thereof.

The fourth ; all that came over with the Conqueror were not gentlemen until they came over with the Conqueror. For instantly upon their victory, their flesh was refined, blood clarified, spirits elevated to an higher purity and perfection. Many a peasant in Normandy commenced monsieur by coming over into England, where they quickly got goods to their gentry, lands to their goods, and those of the most honourable tenure in capite itself. What Richard the Third said, no less spitefully than falsely, of the Woodviles, (brethren to the wife of his brother king Edward the Fourth, by whom they were advanced,) that “many were made noble who formerly were not “worth a noble,” was most true of some of the Norman soldiery, suddenly starting up honourable from mean originals. These cruelly insulted over the Saxon ancient gentry whom they found in England. Thus on the new casting of a die, when ace is on the top, sise must needs be at the bottom.

The fifth ; besides native Normans, many of the neighbouring countries engaged in England’s in-the neighbouring nations under the notion of Normans. VASION. As Flemings, which Baldwin earl of Flanders, and father-in-law unto the conqueror, went to aid him: Walloons, with many from Picardy, Britain, Anjou, and the very heart of France. Thus when a fair of honour and profit is proclaimed, Chapman will flock from all parts unto it. Some will wonder that any would be such wilful losers as to exchange France for England, a garden for a field. Was not this degrading of their souls in point of pleasure, going backward from wine to ale, from wheat to oats, then the general bread-corn of England? Besides, coming Northward, they left the sun on their backs; the sun, who is a comfortable usher to go before, but bad train-bearer to come behind one. But let such know, that England in itself is an excellent country, too good for the unthankful people which live therein, and such foreigners, who seemingly slight, secretly love, and like the plenty and profit thereof. But, grant England far short of France in goodness, yet such adventurers hoped to achieve to themselves a better condition in a worse country. Many a younger brother came over hither in hope here to find an elder brothership, and accordingly procured an inheritance to him and his posterity. As for the great French nobility, store was no sore unto them: such pluralists retained still their old patrimonies in France, with the additions of their new possessions in England.

W. names
W. titles

The sixth: names coming over with the conquest beginning with W were not out of France, but the vicinage thereof. As the Britons disclaim X, the Latins Y, (save when the badge of a Greek word Latinized,) so the French disown W. When we find it therefore the initial letter of a name, whereof many occur in the ensuing catalogue, it argueth the same Walloon, or Almain. Yea, I am credibly informed, that some of the English here, wearied with Harold's usurpation, fled over into Normandy to fetch in the conqueror; so that when king William entered, they returned into England. And this particularly hath been avouched of the noble family of the Wakes, who were here before the conquest, yet found among the Norman invaders.

The seventh; Battel-abbey roll is the best extant catalogue of Norman gentry, if a true copy thereof could be procured.

The twi-light credit of Battel Abbey roll.

1. Battel-abbey roll. Because hung up in that abbey, as fixed to the freehold thereof, where the names of such as came over with the conquest were recorded.

2. Best extant. Otherwise industry, with honesty, leisure, and liberty to peruse Domesday-book, might collect one more perfect out of impartial records, which neither fear nor flatter. Such a catalogue were to be believed on its word, before battle roll on its oath.

3. Yet that abbey roll deserved credit, if a true copy might be procured. One asked, "Which was "the best St. Augustine?" to whom this answer was given, (generally true of all ancient authors,) "even that Augustine which is least corrected." For corrections commonly are corruptive, as following the fancy and humour of the corrector.

Battel-abbey roll hath been practised upon with all the figures of diction, prothesis, aphæresis, &c.; some names therein being augmented, subtracted, extended, contracted, lengthened, curtailed. The same scruple therefore which troubleth sophisters, "Whether Jason's weather-beaten ship, so often "clouted and patched with new boards, were the — same numerically with the first;” may be per-pounded of Battel-abbey roll, whether that extant with us, after so many alterations, be individually the same with the original? See what a deadly gash our great antiquary* gives to the credit thereof:

— Whosoever considereth it well, shall find it to be — forged, and those names to be inserted, which the — time in every age favoured, and were never men— tioned in that authentical record.”

Q.3. Then it is of no credit.

*Q.4. If such be the depraving of Battel-abbey roll, then no credit at all is due unto it. Let it be pullорied for a mere cheat, and be suffered no longer to go about, to deceive the honest reader thereof; seeing we cannot bear the true tone of names therin.
monks have so set them to the tune of their present benefactors and minions of the age they lived in.*

Q.5. How credit there-unto is to be considered.

A.5. Though there be much adulteration therin, yet I conceive the main bulk and body thereof uncorrupted. As they therefore overvalue this roll who make it the grammar of French gentry, the herald's institutes and of canonical credit amongst them, so such too much decry the same, who deny all trust thereunto. Yea, we may confidently rely on this roll, where we find a concurrence of ancient English historians therewith: and this will appear in the generality of names which that roll presented unto us.

We find in our English chroniclers two printed copies (a manuscript thereof worth mentioning I have not met with) of Battel-abbey roll. Wherein

* Camden in his Remains, printed 1584. No doubt exists of the correctness of Camden's assertion. No two copies exist alike of this roll, and most of them are interpolated with names of families of English origin. See another copy in the Scalae Chronicae, p. 11. Unpublished printed for the Marlbank Club 1836. I have ranged similar names opposite each other.]

such various lections, they agree neither in number, order, nor spelling of the names; which, though generally digested in an alphabetical way, are neither of them exactly ordered according to the same. But behold both.

Holinshed, p. 3.	Stow's Chr. p. 105.	Holinshed, p. 3.	Stow's Chr. p. 105.
Aumarle	Aumeic	Bigot
Aincourt		Bohun	Bohun
Audeley	Audeley	Bailif	Baylife
Angilliam	Angilliam	Bondeuile	Bondeuile
Argentoune	Argentoun	Brabason	Barbason
Arundell	Arundell	Baskeruile
Auenant	Auenant		Beer
Abell	Abel	Bures	Bures
Auuerne		Bounilaine	Bonylayne
Aunwers		Bois
Angers	Awgers	Botelere
Angenoun	Angernoun	Bourcher
Archere	Archer	Brabaion	Barbayon
Anuay		Berners	Berners
Asperuile	Asperuile	Braibuf	Braybuf
Albeuile		Brande	Brand
Andeuile		Bronce
Amouerduile	Amonerduile		Bonuile
Arcy	Arcy	Burgh	Burgh
Albeny	Albeny	Bushy	Busshy
Akeny	Akeny	Banet
Aybeuare		Blondell	Blundell
Amay		Breton	Bretton
Aspermound	Asperemound		Belasyse
Amerenges.			Bowser
			Bayons
			Bulmeref
Bertram	Bertram	Bluat
Buttecourt	Butrecourt	Baious
Brebis	Bræhus	Browne	Broune
Byseg	Byseg	Beke	Beke
Bardolfe	Bardolf	Bickard
Basset	Basset		Bowlers

Holinshed, p. 3	Now's Chr. p. 105.	Holinshed, p. 3	Now's Chr. p. 105.
Banastre	Banestre	Borassile
Baloun		Browe
	Belomy	Belouers	Belouers
	Belknap	Buffard	Buffard
Beauchamp	Beauchamp	Botelere	Botelere
Bray		Bonuier
Bandy	Bandy	Boteuile	Buteule
Bracy		Bellire
Boundes		Bastard
Bascoun		Bainard
Broilem		Brauard	Brauard
Broley	Broyleby	Beelbelme	B. belbelme
Burnell	Burnell	Braine
Bellet	Belot	Brent
	Beufort	Braunch	Brauche
Baudewin	Baudewine	Belesus	Blesur
Beaumont		Blundell	Blundel
Burdon	Burdon	Burdett	Burdet
Berteulay	Berteuley	Bagott	Bageot
Barre	Barre	Beauuise	Beauuent
Busseuile	Busseuile	Belemis
Blunt	Blunt	Beuin
Baupere	Beawper	Bernon
Beuill		Boels	Bools
Barduedor		Belefroun	Belefroun
Brette	Bret	Brutz
Barrett	Barret	Barchampe	Barchampe
Bonrett
Bainard
Barniuale	Barneuale
Bonett		Camois	Camer
Barry	Barry	Camuile	Canaille
Bryan		Chawent	Chawent
Bedim	Bodyt	Chauncy	Chancy
Berteuile	Berteuile	Conderay	Couderay
Bertin	Bertine	Colule	Colule
Berencoule		Chamberlaine	Chamberria sc.
Believe	Belew	Chambermoun	Chambermoune
Beuery		Coum
Bussell	Bushell	Columber

Holinshed, p. 3.	Stow's Chr. p. 105.	Holinshed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 105.
Cribett	Cribet	Cherecourt	Cherecourt
Creuquere		Cammile	Chaunuile
Corbine	Corbine	Clerenay	Clereney
Corbett	Corbet	Curly	Curley
	Coniers	Cuily
Chaundos	Chaundos	Clinels
	Coucy	Chaundos
Chaworth	Chaworthe	Courteney
Cleremaus	Claremous	Clifford	Clifford
Clarell	Clarell
Chopis	Camuine	Denauille	Deanuile
Chaunduit	Chaunduyt	Dercy	Dercy
	Claruays	Dine	Dine
Chantelow	Chantilowe	Dispencere	Dispencer
Chamberay	Colet	Daubeny
Cressy	Cressy	Daniell	Daniell
Curtenay	Courtenay	Deuise	Deuyse
Conestable	Constable	Druell	Druell
	Chaucer	Deuaus	Deuaus
Cholmeley	Cholmelay	Dauers	Dauers
Champney	Champeney	Dodingsels	Doningsels
Chawnos	Chawnos	Darell	Darell
Comiule	Cornevile	Delaber	De la Bere
Champaine	Champaine	Delapole	De la Pole
	Carew	Delalinde	De la Lind
Careuile	Claruaile	Delahill	De la Hill
Carbonelle	Carbonell	Delaware	De la Ware
Charles	Charles	Delauache	De la Watch
Chereberge	Chareberge	Dakeny	Dakeny
Chawnes	Chawnes	Dauntre	Dauntre
Chaumont	Chawmont	Desny	Desnye
Caperoun		Dabernoune	Dabernoune
Cheine	Cheyne	Damry	Damry
Curson	Cursen	Daueros	Daueros
Couille,	Couell	Dauonge
Chaiters	Chayters	Duilty
Cheines	Cheynes	Delauere	De la Vere
Cateray	Cateray	Delahoid
		Durange
		Delee	De Liele

Holinsbed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 105.	Holinsbed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 105.
Delaund		Fitz-Pain	Fitz-Payne
Delaward	De la Warde	Fitz-Auger
Delaplanch	De la Planch	Fitz-Aleyne	Fitz-Alyne
Damnot		Fitz-Rauff	Fitz-Rauffe
Danway	Danway	Fitz-Browne	Fitz-Browne
Dehense	De Hewse	Fouke	Fuke
Deuile		Freuil	Freuale
Disard	Disard	Froat de Boef
Doiuille		Facunberge	Faconberge
Durant	Durant	Fort
Drury	Drury	Frisell	Frisell
Dabitott		Fitz-Simon
Dunsteruile		Fitz-Fouk
Dunchampe		Filioll	Filioll
Dambelton		Fitz-Thomas	Fitz-Thomas
Estrange	Estrange	Fitz-Morice	Fitz-Morice
Estuteuile	Estutauile	Fitz-Hugh	Fitz-Hugh
Engine	Engayne	Fitz-Henrie
Estriels	Estriols	Fitz-Warren	Fitz-Warren
	Euers	Fitz-Rainold
Esturney	Esturney	Flamuile	Fauuile
Ferrerers		Formay	Formay
Foluille	Foluile	Fitz-Eustach
Fitz-Water	Fitz-Water	Fitz-Laurence
Fitz-Marmu- duke	Fitz-Marma- duke	Formiband	Formiband
Fleuez		Frisound	Frisoun
Filberd	Fibert	Finere	Finer
Fitz-Roger	Fitz-Roger	Fitz-Robert	Fitz-Robert
Fanecourt	Fanecourt	Furniiale	Furniali
Ferrers		Fitz-Geffrey
Fitz-Philip	Fitz-Philip	Fitz-Herbert	Fitz-Herbert
Filiot		Fitz-Peter
Furniueus		Fichet
Furniueus		Fitz-Rewes
Fitz-Otes		Fitz-Fitz
Fitz-William	Fitz-William	Fitz-John	Fitz-John
Fitz-Roand		Flechampe
		"
		Gurnay

Holinshead, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.	Holinshead, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.
Gressy	Gargraue	Hercy
Graunson	Graunson	Herioun
Gracy	Gracy	Herne	Herne
Georges		Harecourt
Gower	Glaunvile	Henoure
Gaugy	Gouer	Houell
Goband		Hamelin	Hamelyn
Gray	Gascoyne	Harewell	Harewell
Gaunson	Gray	Hardell	Hardel
Golofre	Golofer	Haket	Hecket
Gobion		Hamound	Hamound
Grensy		Harcord	Harecord
Graunt	Grauns	Jarden	Jarden
Greile		Jay	Jay
Greuet		Jeniels
Gurry		Jerconuise
Gurley	Gurly	Januile	Janvile
Grammori		Jasperuile	Jasperville
Gernoun		Kaunt
Grendon		Karre	Karre
Gurdon	Gurdon	Karrowe	Karron
Gines		Keine
Griuel		Kimaronne
Greneuile		Kiriell	Kyriell
Glateuile		Kancey
Gurney		Kenelre
Giffard		Loueny	Levony
Gouerges		Lacy	Lestrange
Gamages	Gamages	Linneby
	Gaunt	Latomer	Latomere
Haunteney		Loueday	Loueday
Haunsard	Hansard		Logenton
Hastings	Hastings	Louell	Levell
Hanlay	Haulay		Le Scrope
Haurell		Lemare	Lemare
Husee	Husie	Leuetot

Holinshed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.	Holinshed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.
	Litterile		Mangras
Lucy	Lucy		Mendebellum
Luny	Lislay or Liele	Mortimaine	Mortimaine
Longespes	Longapes	Muse	Muse
Louerace		Mountbather	Mountbather
Longechampe	Longchampe	Maleuile	Maleuile
Lascales	Lascel	Marteine	Marteine
Lacy		Mountauler
Louan		Malet
Leded		Mounteney	Mountney
	Lindsey	Monfichef
Logeuile		Maleberbe	Maleberbe
Luse		Mare
	Le Vawse	Musegras	Mangras
Loterell	Loterell	Musarde	Munard
Loruge		Moine
Longueale	Longuaile	Montrauers	Mantravers
Loy	Loy	Merke	Merke
Lorancourt		Murres	Murres
Loions		Mortiuaile
Limers		Monchenesey
Longepay			Montague
Laumale			Mantebell
Lane	Lane	Mallory	Malory
Louetot		Marny	Merry
	Le Dispenser	Mountagu
		Mountfurd
Mohant		Maule	Manley
Mowne		Monbermon
Maundeuiile		Musett	Musett
Marmilon	Marmilon	Meneuile
Moribray	Moribray	Manteuenant
Moruile	Morvile	Manse
Miriell		Menpincoy	Menpincoe
Manlay	Manley	Maine
Malebraunch	Malebranch	Mainard	Mainard
Malemaine	Malemaine	Morell	Morell
Mortimere		Marley
	Muschampe	Mainell

Holinshed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.	Holinshed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.
Maleluse		Noers	Nevile
Memorous		Neuile	Neumarch
Morreis		Newmarch	Norton
Morleian		Norbet	Norbet
Maine		Norice	Norece
Malenere		Newborough	Newborough
Mandut	Mandute	Neiremet
Mountmarten	Mountmartin	Neile	Needle
Mantelet		Normauile	Normanvile
Miners	Myners	Neofmarche
Mauclerke		Nermitz
Maunchenell		Nembrutz
Mouet		Oteuel	Oteuel
Meintenore		Olibet	Olibef
Meletak		Olifant	Olifaunt
Manuile		Osenel
Mangisere		Oisell	Oysell
Maumasin		Olifard	Oliford
Mountlouel		Orinall
Mawrewarde		Orioll	Oryoll
Mouhaut		Pigot	Pigot
Meller		Per[c]y	Percy
Mountgomerie		Perepount	Perepount
Manlay		Pershale	Perahale
Maularde		Power	Power
Mainard		Painell	Paynel
Menere		Perche	Peche
Martinast		Pauvey
Mare		Peurell	Peverell
Mainwaring	Mainwaring	Perot	Perot
Matelay		Picard	Picard
	Mantell	Pinkenie	Pudsey
Malemis		Pomeray	Pimeray
Maleheire		Pounce	Pounsey
Moren		Pauely
Melun		Paifrere
Marceans
Maiell	Mayel
Morton	Morton

Holinsbed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.	Holinsbed, p. 4.	Stow's Chr. p. 106.
Plukenet		Risers
Phuars		Randuile
Punchardoun	Punchardon	Roselin
Pinchard	Pynchard	Rastoke
Placy	Placy	Rinuill
Pugoy		Rougere
Patefinc		Rait
Place		Ripere
	Patine	Rigny
Pampilioun	Pampilion	Richemound	Richmond
Percelay		Rochford	Rochford
Perere		Raimond	Raymond
Pekeny	Pekeney	Souch	Souche
Poterell	Poterell	Sheuile
Peukeny		Seuchens
Peccell		Seuclere
Pinell		Sent Quintin	Saint Quintin
Putrill		Sent Omere	Saint Omere
Petivoll		Sent Almond	Saint Almond
Preaus		Sent Legere	Saint Legere
Pantolf		Somervile	Somerville
Peito		Siward
	Pervinke	Saunsaouere
Penecord	Penicord	Sanford	Sanford
Prendirlegast		Sanctes
Percivale		Sauay
Quinsey	Quinsey	Saulay
Quintiny	Quintine	Sules
Ros	Rose	Somerey	Somery
Ridell	Ridle	Sent John
Riuers		Sent George	Saint George
Riuell	Rynel	Sent Les	Saint Les
Rous	Rous	Sease
Rushell	Russel	Saluin	Savine
Raband		Say
Ronde	Rond	Solers
Ric		Saulay
Rokell			Saint Glo

Holinsbed, p. 5.	Stow's Chr. p. 107.	Holinsbed, p. 5.	Stow's Chr. p. 107.
Sent Albin	Seint Albine	Tolet	Tolet
Sent Martin		Travers	Travers
Sourdemale		Taverner	Taverner
Seguin		Trenchevile
Sent Barbe	Seint Barbe	Trenchelion
Sent Vile	Sandevile	Tankerville
Souremount		Tirel	Tirel
Soreglise		Trivet
Sandvile		Tardevile
Sauncey		Turburville
Sirewast		Tinevile
Sent Cheverel		Torel	Torel
Sent More	Seint More	Tortechappel
Sent Scude- more	Seint Scude- more	Trusbote
		Treverel
		Tenwys
		Totelles	Totels
	Towrs
Toget	Toget
Tercy		Vere	Vere
	Talybois	Vernoun	Vernoune
Tuchet	Tuchet	Vesacy
Tracy		Verdoune	Verdon
	Truslot	Valence	Valence
Trousbut	Trusbut		Vancord
Trainel	Traynel	Verdeire	Verder
Taket	Taket	Vavasour	Vavasour
Trison		Vendore	Vender
Talbot	Talbot	Verlay	Verlay
Touny		Valenger
Traies		Venables	Venables
Trussel	Trussel	Venoure	Venoure
Tollemach		Vilan	Vilan
Tolous		Verland	Verland
Tanny	Tanny	Valers
Touke		Veirny	Verny
Tibtote	Tibtote	Vavurvil
Turbevile	Turbevile	Veniels
Turvile	Turvile	Verrere
Tomy		Uschere

Holinshed, p. 5.	Stow's Chr. p. 107.	Holinshed, p. 5.	Stow's Chr. p. 107.
Veffay		Valenges
Vanay
Vian		Wardebois	Wardebus
Vernoys	Vernois	Ward	Warde
	Umfranvile	Wafre
Urnal	Urnall	Wake	Wake
Unket	Unket	Wareine	Waren
Urnaful		Wate	Wate
Vanderol		Watelin	Wateline
Vaberon		Waterile	Waterile
Valingford		Wely	Woly
Venicorde		Werdonel
Valive		Wespiale
Viville		Wivell	Wyrel
Vancorde	Vancord

The total sum of all in Ralph Holinshed. 639.

The total sum of all in John Stow. 407.

Besides this roll of Battel-abbey, there is another extant, not, as this, alphabetically modelled, the work of some monk well at leisure, but loose, without any literal order. An argument, in my opinion, of the more native purity thereof, less soiled with partial fingers, as not so much tampered with by art and industry. It is reputed by many to be the muster-roll of such principal soldiers as embarked with duke William at St. Valeries: and it is said that after the fight ended, this list was called over, and all persons solemnly summoned to answer to their names therein; though many made no response, as either sick of their wounds, or slain outright amongst the six thousand and odd which lost their lives on the place. Were we assured hereof, we would prefer this before the former roll, believing a French muster-master rather than any English monk, (though the abbot of Battel himself,) as not so subject to the suspicion of English flattery herein. This catalogue is taken out of Guilliaume Tayleur, a Norman chronicler of good credit; but the worst is, we want Tayleur's French original, and I fear it hath passed through some botcher's hands before it came to us. For there be three editions thereof in our English historians, which, like the feet of a badger, fall out of unequal length, if the reader be pleased to measure them, so different the number of names therein. However, because this catalogue may conduce to the supplying of defects, clearing of doubts, and amending of faults in that former, we here present the several copies thereof*.

* [I have ventured to diverge a little from the text in printing the following names. The lists as given by Fox and Stow stand in the same order as before, but the arrangement of that from Holinshed has been slightly varied, in order that like names might stand on the same line, and so the reader be enabled at a glance to observe the discrepancies of the various chroniclers. The list from Fox agrees, as far as I can discover, more nearly than the others with the ancient copies of the Roll; and next to this, the one from Holinshed. The greater number of names in the last mentioned writer is remarkable; some are merely repeated with a slight variation in the spelling: and these have been placed together for the convenience of the reader. Stow's list is full of misprints; the grossest of which I have ventured to correct. Other copies of the Roll and lists of names will be found at the end of Du Cheane's Scrip-tores Normanici, and in Wace's Chronicle, which has of late been very judiciously edited.]

Fox, Acts and Mon. p 136.	Saw, Chron. p 103.	Holmehad, Chron. 2:2
Odo bishop of Bayeux	Odo bishop of Bayon	Odo bishop of Bay. 2:2
Robert count de Morteaigne, duke William's half brethren.	Robert earl of Morteaigne	Robert earl of M. e. taigne
Baudwin de Buillon	Bandonni de Buillon
Roger count de Beaumont, surnamed with the beard.	Roger earl of Bramont with the beard	Roger earl of Bram. surnamed 1:2 Barbe
Guillaume Malet	Guilliam Mallet	Guillaume Mallet
Le sire de Monfort sur Rille	Le sire de Montfort sur Rille	seig. de Montfort
Guil. de Viexpont	Guil. de Vielz pnt	Guil. de Vepnt
Neel de S. Saverlo Viconte	Neel de Saint Saver le vicont	Neel le viconte
Le sire de Fougiers	Le sire de Feugiers	seig. de Fougeres
Henry Seigneur de Ferieres	Henry sire de Ferrers	Henry seign. de Fer. res
Le sire Daubemare	Le sire Dambemare	Guil. d'Aubellemare
Guil. sire de Romare	Guil. sire de Romare	Guil. de Roumare
Le sire de Lithehare	Le sire de Lithare	erig. de Lathare
Le sire de Touque	Le sire de Touque	Le erig. de Touque
Le sire de la Mare	Le sire de la Mare	Le erig. de la Mare
Le sire de Neauhou	Le sire de Nahalbou	Le erig. de Neauhou
Le sire de Peirou	Le sire de Pirou	Le erig. de Perrus
Rob. sire de Beaufou	Le sire de Beaufou	Robert de Beaufou
Le sire Danou	Le sire de Damnou	Le erig. Dresou
Le sire de Stoteville	Le sire de Stoteville	Le erig. de Stotervis
Le sire de Margneville	Le sire de Margneville	Le erig. de Margneville
Le sire de Tancarville	Le sire de Tankerville	The earl of Tanquer. ville
Eustace Dabeville	Eustace Dambleville	Eustace de Ambieville
Le sire de Magneville	Le sire de Magneville	Le seig. de Magneville
Le sire de Grantmesnil	Le sire de Grimsaville	Le seig. de Gransmed
Guil. Crespin	Guil. Crespin	Guil. Crespus
Le sire de S. Martin	Le sire de S. Martin	Le seig. de S. Marte

Fox, Acta and Mon. p. 236.	Stow, Chron. p. 103.	Holinshed, Chron. p. 2.
Guil. de Moulins	Guil. de Moulinous	Guil. Deamoullins
Le sire de Puis	Le sire de Pins	Le seig. de Puis
Geoffray sire de Mayenne	Gieffray sire de Mayenne	Geoffray de Maienne
Onfrei de Bohon	Anfroy de Bohunt	Aunfray and Manger
Onfrei, et Maugier de Cartrai	Anfroy et Maugier de Cartraict	de Carterey
Guil. de Garenne	Guil. de Garennes	Guil. Desgarennes
Hue de Gournay, sire de Bray	Hue de Gournay, sire de le Bray	Hue de Gourney, alias Genevay le seig. de Bray
Le conte Hue de Gournay	Le conte Hue de Gournay	Hue earl of Gourney
Euguemont de l'Aigle	Enguemount de Laigle	Egremont de Laigle
le viconte de Touars	Le vicont de Touars	le seig. de Laigle
Rich. Dauverenchin	Rich. Douremchin	Le seig. de Touars
Le sire de Biars	Le sire de Biars	Richard d'Aurenchin
Le sire de Solligny	Le sire de Solligny	le seig. de Aurenchin
Le Bouteiller Dau-bigny	Le Bouteillier Dau-bigny	Le seig. de Biars
Le sire de Maire	Le sire de Marre	Le seig. de Solligny
Le sire de Vitry	Le sire de Vitrey	Boutellier d'Aubigny
Le sire de Lacy	Le sire de Lacy	Le seig. de Marcey
Le sire du val Dessaire	Le sire du vall Darie	Le seig. de Vitrey
Le sire de Tracy	Le sire de Tracy	Le seig. de Lachy
Hue sire de Montfort	Hue sire de Montfort	Le seig. de Valdere
Le sire de Piquegny	Le sire de Piqgny	Le seig. de Trassy, alias Tracy
Hamon de Kayen	Hamon de Kayen	Eulde de Montfort
Le sire Despinay	Le sire Despinay	Le seig. de Picquigny
Le sire de Port	Le sire de Port	Henoyn de Cahien
Le sire de Corcy	Le sire de Corchy	Le seig. d'Espinay
Le sire de Iort	Le sire de Jort	Osmond seig. du Port
Le sire de Reviers	Le sire de Rivers	Le seig. de Corchy
Guil. Moyonne	Guil. Moyon	Guil. de Movion
Raoul Taisson de Cingueleiz	Raoul Tesson de Chinguelois	Guil. de Moyenne
		Raoul Tesson de Cinguelois

Fox, Acta and Mon. p. 136.	Slow, Chron. p. 103.	Habashed, Chron. p. 1.
Roger Marmion	Rogier Marmion	Roger Marmion
Raoul de Gael	Raoul de Gael	Raoul de Gael
Avenal des Byars	Avenel de Biars	Avenal de Bors
Hubert Paiennel des Monstiers	Parnel du Monstier	Pauwel du Monstier
Rob. Bertran le Tort	Robert Hubert	Hubert
	Bertram le Tort	Rob. Bertram le Tort
Le sire de Seulle	Le sire de Seulle	Le seig. de Seulle
Le sire de Dorival	Le sire de Dorival	Le seig. Durival
Le sire de Brehal	Le sire de Brehal	Le seig. de Brehal
Le sire de S. Jehan	Le sire de S. Jehan	Le seig. de S. John
Le sire de Bris	Le sire de Bris	Le seig. de Bris
Le sire du Homme	Le sire de Homme	Le seig. de Homme
Le sire de Sauchhoy	Le sire de Saumay	Le seig. de Sauchoy
Le sire de Cailly	Le sire de Cailly	Le seig. de Cailly
Le sire de Semilly	Le sire de Semilly	Le seig. de Semilly
Le sire de Tilly	Le sire de Tilly	Le seig. de Tilly
Le sire de Rounelli	Le sire de Romely	Le seig. de Rounelly
Mar. de Basqueville	Martell de Basqueville	Le seig. de Basque- ville
Le sire de Praels	Le sire de Praux	Le seig. de Praez
Le sire de Govis	Le sire de Govys	Le seig. de Govys
Le sire de Sainteals	Le sire de Sainteaulx	Le seig. de Sainteys
Le sire de Moulloy	De Mulloiy	Le seig. de Moulioy
Le sire de Monceaulx		Le seig. de Monceaux
The archers du val de Reul, and of Bre- theul, and of many other places.	These archers of the vale of Rueill, and of Bretviel, and of many other places.	The archers of Bret- vile
Le sire de S. Saen, i. de S. Sydonio	Le sire de S. Saen	The archers of Van- drieule
Le sire de la Riviere	Le sire de la Rivier	Le seig. de la Rive
Le sire de Salmar- ville	Le sire de Salmarville
Le sire de Tony	Le sire de Tony	Le seig. de Tony
Eude de Beugieu	Eude de Beugieu	Euldes de Beuvre
Le sire de Oillie	Le sire de Oillie
Le sire de Lacy	Le sire de Sacy	Le seig. de Sanci
Le sire de Nassu	Le sire de Nassie	Le seig. de Nassi

Fox, Acts and Mon. p. 236.	Stow, Chron. p. 103.	Holinshed, Chron. p. 2.
Le Viadams de Chaymes	Le Visduams de Chaymes	Le Vidam de Chames
Le aire du Sap	Le sire de Sap	Le seig. du Sap
Le sire de Glos	Le sire Duglosse	Le seig. de Glotz
Le aire de Mine	Le sire de Nime
Le sire de Glanville	Le sire de Blamville	Le seig. de Vanville
Le sire de Breencon	Le sire de Brencon	Le seig. de Blainvile
Le Vidam de Partay	Le vidam de Partenay	Le seig. Branchou
Raoul de Morimont	Raoult de Mormont	Le seig. de Breansou
Pierre de Bailleul aire de Fiscamp	Pierre de Bailleul sire de Fescamp	Le Vidam du Passais
Le aire de Beaufault	Le sire de Beaufault	Pierre du Ballieul
Le sire de Tillieres	Le sire de Tillieres	seig. de Fescampe
Le aire de Pacy	Le sire de Pacy	Le seig. Balleul
Le Seneschal de Corcy	Le seneschall de Cor- chy	Le seig. de Beaufault
Le sire de Gacy	Le sire de Gacy	Le seig. de Telleres
Le sire de Doully	Le sire de Doully	Le seig. de Passy
Le sire de Sacy	Le sire de Sancy	Le seneschal de Cor- chy
Le sire de Vacy	Le sire de Vacy	Le seig. Torchys
Le aire de Tourneeur	Le sire de Tourneur	Le seig. de Gassey
Le aire de Praeres	Le sire de Praores
Guil. de Coulombieres	Guilliam de Colom- bieres	Le seig. de Saussy
Hue aire de Bollebec	Hue sire de Bollebec	Le seig. de Vassey
Rich. sire d'Orbec	Richard sire Dorbec	Le seig. de Tourneur
Le aire de Bonneboz	Le sire de Bonnebos	Le seig. de Preaux Guil. de Colombieres,
		le seig. de Colom- bieres
Le sire de Tresgoz	Le sire de Troisgots
Le sire de Montfiquet	Le sire Mont Fiquet	Le seig. de Barnabost
Hue le Bigot de Ma- letot	Hue le Bigot, alias Bigot de Maletot	Le seig. du Monfiquet
Le sire de la Haye	Le sire de la Haye	Le seig. de Malletot
		Le seig. de la Hay

Fox, Acta and Mon. p. 236.	Stow, Chron. p. 103.	Holland, Chron. p. 1.
Le sire de Brecy	Le sire de Bracy	Le seig. de la Haie
Le sire de Moubray	Le sire de Moubray	Malerbe
Le sire de Saye	Le sire de Say	Le seig. de Bracy
Le sire de la Ferte	Le sire de Lafert	Le seig. de Moubray
Boutevillain	Bonteuvillain	Le seig. de la Ferte
Troussabout	Troussabout
Guillaume Patric de la Laund	Guilliam Patrit de la Land	Guil. Patria, seig. de la Lande
Hue de Mortemer	Hue de Mortimer	Le seig. de la Lande
Le sire Dauviller	Le sire Donviller	Eulde de Mortimer
Le sire Donnebaut	Le sire Donnebaut	Le seig. de Dauviller
Le sire de S. Cler	Le sire de S. Cler	Le seig. de Eanebaek
Rob. filz Herneys duc d'Orleans	Robert le Fits Herneys duke Dorleans	Le seig. de S. Cler
Le sire de Harecourt	Le sire de Harecourt	Rob. filz Herneys, duc de Orleans
Le sire de Crevecœur	Le sire Crevecure	Errand earl of Harecourt
Le sire de Dryncourt	Le sire de Drencourt	Le seig. de Crevecore
Le sire de Brencort	Le sire de Bremetot	Le seig. de Brencot
Le sire de Combray	Le sire de Cambray
Le sire Daunay	Le sire Dauney
Le sire de Fontenay	Le sire Fonteney	Le seig. de Fontney
Le conte Deureux	Le conte Deureux	The earl of Eureux
De sire de Roberchil	Le sire de Roberchil
Alain Fergant, conte de Bretaigne	Alan Fergant conte de Bretaigne	Alain Fergant earl of Bretaigne
Le sire de S. Vallery	Le sire de saint Wallery	Le seig. de S. Valery
Le conte Dou	Le conte Dedeu	The earl d'Eu
Gualtier Giffard conte de Longueville	Gualter Giffart, conte de Longueville	Le seig. de Longueville
Le sire Destouteville	Le sire de Stouteville	Le seig. de Longeville
Le conte Thomas Daubmalle	Le conte Thomas Daubmalle	Le seig. de Estoutevile
Guil. conte de Hoynes, et Darques	Guil. de Houmes et Darques	Thomas earl d' Aumale
		The earl de Houmes

Fox, Acts and Mon. p. 236.	Stow, Chron. p. 103.	Holinshed, Chron. p. 2.
Le sire de Bereville	Le sire de Barrevile	Le seig. de Bervile
Le sire de Breante	Le sire de Breaute	Le seig. de Breaute
Le sire de Freanville	Le sire de Freanvile	Le seig. de Freanvile
Le sire de Pavilly	Le sire de Pauilly	Le seig. de Pavilly.
Le sire de Clere	Le sire de Clere	Le seig. de Clere
Toustan du Bac	Tostam du bec
Le sire de Maugny	Le sire de Maugny	Le seig. de Magny
Roger de Montgomery	Roger du Montgo- mery Comes	Roger de Montgomery
Amaury de Touars.	Almary de Touaers.	Amaury de Touars.

There is still another catalogue, late in the possession of Thomas Scriven, esquire. I confess, quantus author, tanta fides; and the gentleman, long since dead, being generally unknown, some will question the authority thereof. But know he was a good promus-condus of ancient records. Condus, in keeping them faithfully himself, and promus, in imparting them freely to others. This his catalogue is exemplified by John Stow in his chronicle. Of whom though a Cambridge comedian was pleased pleasantly to say, that “Mendacio now and then jogged on the “elbow,” yet indeed he deserveth Camden’s commendation of a famous chronicler, lacking learning rather than truth, seldom omitting what is, sometimes recording what is not observable^b. But see the catalogue^c.

^a [The name of Thomas Scriven, esq. occurs in Stow’s Survey, p. 470, as a benefactor to the parish of St. Leonard’s Shoreditch.]

^b Camden in Middlesex,

[p. 314.]

^c Stow’s Chron. p. 107. [This list is printed most inaccurately in Stow. The more remarkable blunders have been corrected in the text.]

Achard	Bracy	Curthoſe	Fouard
Averenges	Brenenile	Chamlin	Frenel
Aielard	Bounttule	Costeatin	Previle
Alard	Butevile	Comthense	Froesvile
Aubeney	Beauchampe	Coomit	Folentile
Avenel	Burnel	Chalenges	Firmunde
Asprevil	Bussel	Chastlem	Fingefrey
Audeny	Beleice	Courtney	Firpers
Akine	Bonere	Chawerd	Fitwates
Arcy	Bodler	Curcy	Feskampe
Amile	Botiler	Conun	Fishu
Amundivile	Bigod	Criole	Fisun
Abbeville	Burle	Chalers	Ferrer
Andvile	Baul	Chen	Fornitall
Albemarle	Brenbe	Chaucer	Fieues
Aubrey	Brus	Chandos	Fitzabrian
Archer	Butelem	Cunly	Frison
Bastarde	Bricourt	Curly	Ferers
Baignard	Brian	Crely	Foljambe
Barvile	Botes	Colevile	Frignes
Brassard	Bobun	Cabot	Fitzgaris
Berad	Bion	Charnel	Fornentus
Boygnard	Bailiol	Chamel	Grange
Buakarvile	Brocheris	Clarel	Grevile
Baret	Berdulfe	Cheinie	Gienuale
Basset	Bancan	Darcy	Gorsavile
Bars	Bussey	Dunsterville	Genuale
Belet	Beamuis	Douchampe	Gerard
Beil	Bleis	Despenser	Giffard
Breit	Baventre	Duredent	Gondrel
Boneit	Cavile	Drivell	Gurges
Bluet	Carevile	Duket	Gumer
Brachet	Cardevile	Dreward	Gigud
Buket	Condrey	Delamare	Gubet
Biset	Cresey	Druvall	Gipot
Blundel	Cautlon	Dela	Garn
Burdet	Caily	Deincourt	Gunter
Blete	Corbet	D Eureus	Gray
Barry	Clare	Estetkirke	Grauntson
Berr	Curtain	Faherburt	Gourney

Greis	Lovell	Morley	Pales
Gamage	Lescei	Martinas	Prouz
Gautere	Lambert	Murdacke	Pirim
Gorge	Lenn	Metun	Peisim
Hainule	Limare	Mameisin	Parteben
Hantvile	Liale	Mohun	Puntfrait
Humchampe	Lo	Mare	Quinci
Herebrace	Maignard	Molins	Quatrimare
Henile	Maureward	Neumarch	Russel
Herenile	Mountford	Nepunt	Ryvel
Havel	Mountague	Orniall	Rivers
Hachet	Mountbray	Osevile	Rochvile
Haket	Maundevile	Orware	Rooz
Harvy	Mortimer	Passemer	Richmount
Hanesy	Mansel	Passenaunt	Seintevile
Hussy	Maschy	Pigot	Somery
Hai	Mungomer	Poorvanger	Say
Hasard	Morvile	Pers	Suneli
Hansard	Meisy	Purcel	Sorel
Hasser	Munty	Pichard	Seteplace
Hubert	Mountein	Pypard	Spivenile
Hamelin	Mulet	Pamel	Saunderville
Harecurte	Mumfitchet	Panel	Sonule
Hus	Martell	Piterel	Soler
Hense	Morell	Peverel	Sourrile
Iardin	Musard	Pleisy	Stutevile
Kemes	Mallet	Paveli	Soleny
Keines	Milere	Pilet	Spigurnel
Kosin	Molevorer	Parly	Seintbrevel
Kamais	Mautravers	Palet	Soylard
Laci	Moreiis	Piket	Swywar
Liar	Muelent	Percy	Saucer
Lunecy	Meigne	Punchet	Sansaver
Luret	Melvil	Pachet	Seniler
Lucy	Manne	Punis	Saintcler
Lidet	Mareis	Pandulfe	Seintomer
Longuevile	Marmion	Pulem	Seintleger
Levener	Mortem	Penir	Saundenal
Licot	Manfey	Penne	Savage
Lonecot	Maresthall	Phanecourt	Seintion

Saint-martin	Toret	Trussebat	Venus
Saucei	Tavit	Toc	Vavasur
Sal	Turpet	Tailpas	Vass
Seignes	Tsamel	Truan	Wodevile
Seintlis	Torchapel	Tener	Wimle
Seintmoris	Tonny	Tisaiure	Wilby
Seintgorge	Trussel	Tayleboys	Watvile
Seintiore	Tuchet	Verer	Ward
Seint-quintin	Torevile	Vilers	Wynchard
Seintmore	Trevet	Vesey	Waldeboef
Sauntpire	Tirel	Vmfravile	Wantacie
Saintchy	Trans	Veilly	Warer
Setuans	Talebot	Valens	Weirim
Seinte-roiz	Turberville	Vein	Yuaire.
Seintelme	Tracy	Vorill

To these six catalogues let me add one more; not that I am an affecter of a septenary number, but because confident it is the best and most authentic of all the rest. I find it in Mr. Fox^d; but surely collected by some more skilful than himself in this kind, out of several ancient chronicles. It containeth such persons who after the battle were advanced to seignories in this land. It presenteth us only with the initial letters of their Christian names, save for the first seven therein. And although hereby we are left at an uncertainty as whether G. signifieth George or Gilbert, J. James or John, yet more than a conjecture may be made by observing what Christian name was predominant in their posterity.

^d Acts and Mon. I. 237. (ed. 1641.)

John de Maundevile	R. de Vaures	S. de Mountfychet
Adam Vndevelle	G. de Argenteen	I. de Genevyle
Bernard de Frevile	I. de Hastings	H. Gyffard
Rich. de Rochvile	G. de Hastank	I. de Say
Gilbert de Frankvile	L. de Burgee	T. Gilbard
Hugo de Dovile	R. de Butvileyn	R. de Chalons
Symond de Rotevile	H. de Malebranch	S. de Chauward
R. de Evile	S. de Malemain	H. Ferret
B. de Kneuvile	G. de Hautevile	Hugo Pepard
Hugo de Morvile	H. Hauteyn	I. de Harecourt
R. de Colevile	R. de Morteyn	H. de Haunsard
A. de Warvile	R. de Mortimer	I. de Lamare
C. de Karvile	G. de Kanovile	P. de Mautrevers
R. de Rotevile	E. de Columb	G. de Ferron
S. de Stotevile	W. Paynel	R. de Ferrers
H. Bohum	C. Panner	I. de D'esty
I. Mohum	H. Pontrel	W. do Werders
W. de Vignoum	I. de Rivers	H. de Bornevile
K. de Vispount	T. de Reuile	I. de Saintdenys
W. Bailboef	W. de Beauchamp	S. de Syncler
S. de Baleyn	R. de Beaupale	R. de Gorges
H. de Marreys	E. de Ou	E. de Gomere
I. Aguleyne	F. Lovel	W. de Fens
G. Agilon	S. de Troys	S. de Filberd
R. Chamburlayne	I. de Artel	H. de Turberville
N. de Vendres	I. de Montebrugge	R. Troblemer
H. de Verdon	H. de Mountesorel	R. de Angon
H. de Verto	W. Trussebut	T. de Morer
C. de Vernon	W. Trussell	T. de Rotelet
H. Hardul	H. Byset	H. de Spencer
C. Cappan	R. Basset	R. de St. Quentin
W. de Camvile	R. Molet	I. de Saint Martin
I. de Camoyes	H. Malovile	G. de Custan
R. de Roz	G. Bonet	Saint Constantin
R. de Boys	P. de Bonvile	Saint Leger et Saint Med.
W. de Waren	S. de Rovile	M. de Cronu et de
T. de Wardboys	N. de Norbeck	S. Viger
R. de Boys	I. de Corneux	S. de Crayel
W. de Audely	P. de Corbet	R. de Crenker
K. Dynham	W. de Mountague

The Roll of Battle Abbey.

N. Meyvel	R. Fitzurz	V. de Somery
I. de Berners	B. Vicount de Low	I. de Saint John
S. de Chumly	G. de C'antemere	T. de Saint Gory
E. de Charers	T. de Cantlow	P. de Buylly
I. de Grey	R. Breunce	R. de Saint Valers
W. de Grangers	T. de Broxeboof	P. de Pinkeny
S. de Grangers	S. de Bolebec	S. de Pavely
S. Baudevyn	B. Mol de Boef	G. de Monthaut
H. Vamgers	I. de Muelis	T. de Mountchay
E. Bertran	R. de Brus	R. de Lymosay
R. Bygot	S. de Brewes	G. de Lucy
S. Treoly	I. de Lille	I. de Artois
I. Trigos	T. de Bellile	N. de Arty
G. de Feines	I. de Waterville	P. de Greavile
H. Foliot	G. de Nevile	I. de Greys
R. Taperyn	R. de Neuburgh	V. de Creacy
S. Talbot	H. de Burgoyne	F. de Courcy
H. Sauntsaver	G. de Bourgh	T. de Lazar
T. de Samford	S. de Lymoges	H. de Lymants
G. de Vandieu	L. de Lyben	I. de Moubray
C. de Vautort	W. de Helyoun	G. de Morley
G. de Mountague	W. de Hilderbron	S. de Gormey
Tho. de Chambernon	R. de Loges	R. de Courtenay
S. de Montfort	S. de Saint Low	P. de Guerney
R. de Fernevalx	I. de Maubank	R. de Cuny
W. de Valence	P. de Saint Malow	I. de la Huse
T. Clarel	R. de Leosern	R. de la Huse
S. de Clervaus	I. de Lovetot	V. de Longevile
P. de Aubermale	G. de Dabbeville	E. Longespy
H. de Saint Arvant	H. de Appetot	I. Ponchardos
E. de Auganuteyn	W. de Percy	R. de la Pomercy
S. de Gant	H. de Lacy	I. de Pountz
G. de Malearbe	G. de Quincy	R. de Pontlarge
H. Mandut	E. Tracy	R. Estrange
W. de Chesun	R. de la Souche	Tho. Savage
L. de Chandut

I presume the reader sufficiently wearied with so many dull prose catalogues, and now we will refresh him a little with an old song, as I find their names metrically composed in the chronicle of John Brompton the abbot. Indeed the rythmes may be said to make themselves, such is the like cadency of many Norman names; and if the verses do but chime and tinck in the close, it is enough to the purpose.

Vous qe desyrez assaver
 Les nouns de grauntz dela la mer
 Qe vindrent od le conquerour
 William Bastard de graunt vigoure,
 Lours surnouns issi vous denys,
 Come je les trova en escris.
 Car les propres nouns force ny a,
 Parce qillis sont chaunges sa et la ;
 Come de Edmond en Edwarde, De Baldwyne en Barnard, De Godwyne en Godard,
 De Elys en Edwyn :
 Et issint des touz autrez nouns,
 Come ils sont levez du founs.
 Parce lour surnouns qe sont usez,
 Et ne sont pas sovent chaungez,
 Vous ay escript ; ore escotez,
 Si vous oier les wylleth.

Maundevyle et Daundevyle	Baylon et Bayloun
Owmfravyle et Dawmfrevyle	Maris et Marmyoun
Boelvyle et Baskarvile	Agulis et Aguloun
Euyle et Cleuyle	Chaumberleyn et Chaumber-
Morevyle et Colevyle	soun
Warbevyle et Carvyle	Vere et Vernoun
Botevyle et Stotevyle	Verdyers et Verdoun
Deverous et Cavervyle	Cryel et Cardoun
Mooun et Boun	Dummer et Dommoun
Vipoun et Vinoun	Hastyng et Cammois

Bardolfe, Botes et Boys	Pyrton et Pypard
Warenne et Wardeboys	Harcourt et Haunard
Rodes et Devereis	Munegrave et Munsard
Auris et Argenteyn	Mare et Mantravers
Botetour et Botevyleyn	Ferna et Ferers
Malebouch et Malemeyn	Bernevyle et Berners
Hautevyle et Hauteyn	Cheyne et Chalers
Denney et Dyvryn	Daundon et Dauners
Mulins et Malvesyn	Vessi, Gray et Graungers
Morten et Mortimer	Bertram et Bygod
Braunz et Columber	Trayllis et Traygod
Seynt Denis et Seynt Cler	Penbri et Pypotte
Seint Aubyn et Seynt Omer	Freyn et Folys
Seynt Fylbert, Fyens et Gomer	Daplaoun et Talbote
Turbevyle et Turbemur	Sanzaver et Saunford
Gorges et Spenser	Vadu et Vatorte
Brus et Boteler	Montagu et Monaford
Crevequel et Seynt Quinteyn	Forneus et Fornyvane
Deverouge et Seynt Martyn	Valens, Yle et Vans
Seynt Mor et Seynt Leger	Clarel et Clarnus
Seynt Vigor et Seynt Per	Aubervyle et Seint Amauns
Avynel et Paynell	Agantez et Dragans
Peyvere et Peverell	Malerbe et Maudut
Rivers et Rivel	Brewes et Chaudet
Beauchamp et Beaupel	Fisowtres et Fiz de Lou
Lou et Lovell	Cantemor et Cantelou
Ros et Druell	Braybusse et Huldbynse
Mountabouns et Mountsorell	Bulebeks et Molyne
Trussebot et Trussell	Moleton et Besyle
Bergos et Burnell	Rochforde et Deservyle
Bray et Boterell	Watervyle et Dayvyle
Biset et Basset	Neburs et Nevyle
Malevyle et Malet	Hynoys, Burs, Bargenoun
Bonevyle et Bonet	Yleton, Hyldebrood, Helyoun
Nervyle et Narbet	Loges et Seint Lou
Coynale et Corbet	Maubank et Seint Malou
Mountayn et Mounfychet	Wake et Wakevyle
Geynevyle et Gyffard	Coudree et Knevyle
Say et Sownd	Scales et Clermount
Chary et Chaward	Beauvys et Beaumont

Mouns et Mountchampe	Grevyle et Courcy
Nowers et Nowchampe	Arras et Cressy
Percy, Crus et Laci	Merle et Moubray
Quyncey et Traci	Gornay et Cowrtnay
Stokes et Somery	Haustralayng et Tornay
Seynt Jehan et Seynt Jay	Husee et Husay
Greyle et Seynt Walry	Pounchardon et Pomeray
Pynkeney et Panely	Longevyle et Longespay
Mohaunt et Mountchensey	Peyns et Pountlarge
Loveyn et Lucy	Straunge et Sauvage ^e .
Artoys et Arcy

Pass we now from poetry to painting, seeing great the affinity betwixt them, fancy being predominant in both. Present we here the reader with the names and arms of forty soldiers of king William the Conqueror, matched with as many monks; but how, and on what occasion, the ensuing writing will acquaint us^f.

“ In the time of Thurston, our abbot of Ely, born
“ of worshipful parentage in the village of Wichford “ near Ely, king Harold, son of Godwin, and to“ gether with him all the states of England almost,
“ were slain by the soldiers of William duke of “ Normandy, nephew to St. Edward the king, upon “ the feast of St. Calixt the pope, in the year of our “ Lord God one thousand sixty and six.

^e [Brompt. p. 963. collated with the MS. in the Cotton Library.]

^f [The outline of this paper will be found in the Chronicle of Thomas of Ely, published by Wharton in his Ang. Sac. I. 609. But who is the earl of Margary and Edward Byarn? It should almost seem that Edward was a mistake for Herward or Hereward, the Saxon who took refuge in Ely, and earl Margary for earl Morcar. See Flor. Wigorn. an. 1071.]

“ Whereupon Egelwine, bishop of Durham, Eg-“ fride abbot of St. Alban’s, the earl of Margary, “ and Edward Byarn, with sundry other chief of the “ land, together with their friends, laden with great “ treasures, fled unto us, desirous to withstand, so “ far as lay in them, the enterprise of the bastard
“ by whose aid we withstood the tempestuous throte “ of the Normans seven years, until such a time as “ Belase, who at that time was general of the king’s “ army, and from whom the circuit of certain hills
“ at the south end of Alderhithe-causey, which at “ this day are corruptly called Belsar’s hills, took “ their name, being cast up on purpose that the army
“ in the night-time might lodge there safely, astomed
“ us by the means of an huge number of boate “ gathered together upon a sudden. A council then “ being called, it seemed good to our captains in “ convenient time to crave the king’s mercy. Where“ upon certain were sent to the king’s court, being “ then at Warwick, carrying with them to the king
“ a mighty treasure, a competent price and satisfa“ tion to pacify him concerning an unadvised at“ tempt. Wherewith the honourable king was ap“ peased, yet with this covenant and condition, that “ so long as it pleased him, forty of the king’s sol“ diers should be maintained at the charge of the “ monastery. For the king feared, lest that while “ he bent his forces against the Scots not yet sub“ dued, the Isle of Ely, being then a dreadful “ strength, should again revolt to his great danger
“ The soldiers with their retinue are sent, they come “ and here abide. Whereof each one is delivered to “ some principal monk, as a captain to his lieutenant,
“ or a guest to his host. Now the king decreed

“ that Bertwolde the butler should minister food to “ the soldiers and monks jointly together, one with “ another, in the common hall of the monastery.
“ What need many words? These captains to their “ lieutenants, these guests to their hosts, these sol“ diers to their monks were most welcome: for all “ of them entertained each one, each one enter“ tained all, and every one mutually one another, “ with all duties of humanity. At length the fire of “ the civil war being quenched, and the king esta“ blished according to his heart’s desire, five years “ after, his severity in punishing being in godly “ manner pacified, it pleased the king to withdraw “ his yoke, wherewith the pride of the monks was “ now sufficiently abated. And the conqueror re“ claimed his soldiers to punish the ungodly inso-“ lency of his son Robert, who at that time in out“ rageous manner kept riot in Normandy. But our “ monks (which is a wonder to report) did not only “ with tears bewail the departure of their dearest “ mates, the heroical soldiers and welcome guests, “ but howled out most fearfully, and beat their “ breasts as destitute of hope, after the manner of a “ new-married wife, whose husband is violently taken “ away, at an unseasonable time, out of her sweet “ arms unto the wars. For they doubted lest that, “ being thus forsaken, they should be subject to the “ spoil; whereas they had lived securely at ease, “ with their armed guests, to whose trust they had “ committed themselves and their goods. They “ being now all ready for their journey, every one of “ our monks, many in number, invested in their “ copes, in dutiful manner accompanied these gentle“ men departing unto Hadenham, with songs, crosses,

“ censers, processions, and all solemnity that might “ be used. And returning home, took order that “ the arms of each soldier should be lively depainted “ upon the wall of the common hall, where they “ took their repast together, to the perpetual memory “ of the customed kindness of their soldier-like “ guests, the which from time to time, from the pre“ decessors to the successors, and from obscure an“ tiquity to our posterity at this day, are curiously “ set forth to be viewed of all men, not without a “ pleasant delight, in such manner as they glitter “ and shine honourable in the margin of this “ table.”

This writing was composed about the reign of king Henry the Seventh, but the arms set up in Ely-hall (as may appear by inserting the coat of Robert Orford, the fourteenth bishop of Ely) about the year 1306. Which hall was destroyed at the dissolution; but another transcript of the arms of these knights being depicted on the wall of the dean's dining-room, was lately extant, whence our draught here presented was taken, (rather truly than neatly done, out of desire to conform to the original,) and communicated to me by that worthy knight and able antiquary, sir Simon Archer of Warwickshire.

Some will wonder that Mr. Camden maketh no mention hereof, whose omnisciency in these things may be presumed of. Yea, which is more, “ there “ is,” saith he, “ a rampire of mean height, but of “ very large compass, which they call Belsar's hills,
“ of one Belsar, I wot not who^b;” taking no notice

^a See a copy of it in Bens. ^b Camden's Britannia in tham's Ely, p. 161. Cambridgeshire, (p. 361.)

of Belasis, the Norman general who subdued Elie, and from whom our late-produced writing attesteth those hills to be so named. But besides that Camdenus non videt omnia, great antiquaries are sometimes subject to fits of sullenness, and will not see what they do see, when resolved to take no notice thereof.

And now we have presented the reader with eight several catalogues, two of Holinshed's, two of Stow's, two of Mr. Fox, one of Scriven's, one of friar Brompton's, besides the list of Elie knights; I could wish a good herald would make a mono-ogdoon, that is, "one out of eight," and alphabetically digest the same; also note what names are extant, and which, how, and when extinct.

By names which I call extinct, understand, not existent in any signal and remarkable lustre proportionable to their former greatness, though possibly some obscure under-boughs, truly derived thence, may still be in being. That worthy doctorⁱ hath made many converts in physic to his seeming paradox, maintaining the circulation of blood running round about the body of man. Nor is it less true, that gentle blood fetcheth a circuit in the body of a nation, running from yeomanry through gentry to nobility, and so retrograde, returning through gentry to yeomanry again. My father hath told me from the mouth of sir Robert Cotton, that that worthy knight met in a morning a true and undoubted Plantagenet holding the plough in the country.

He might add arms to ancient names, where he could recover any certainty therein; for I am confident that hereditary arms are not so ancient as the ⁱ Dr. Hervey.

conquest, but fixed in families about the beginning of Henry the Third, finding before that time the warlike devices of the sons not the same with the fancies of their fathers, and their grandchildren differing from both.

If any say that I have already gone too far in this subject, who am no herald by profession, but only crier, praec, a crier in the spiritual acceptation of the office; yea, that this favours of revenge, as if because so many in this age invade my calling, I in requital have made incursion into other men's professions; like men that take letters of mart, not caring whom they wrong, so they repair themselves for their former sustained or pretended losses: let such know that I adventure on heraldry not as a calling, but as an accessory quality for recreation. And, in evidence of my loyalty to the king of arms, I submit what here I have written to their censure and correction, who have obliged me unto them with their many and great civilities.

Only I will add some corollaries to this roll, and so conclude.

The prefixing of D' before names. First coroll. When any name begins with a vowel or an H, the prefixing of D' createth a (seeming) new name: as, Arey, D'Arey; Aunvers, D'Aunvers; Haurel or Hairel, D'Hairel.

French surnames discerned by their terminations. Second coroll. French surnames are generally discernible by their terminations:

In age,	as, Savage.	ers,	as, Danvers
ard,	Giffard.	eux,	Devereux
champe,	Beauchampe	et,	Barret
court,	Harcourt	ay,	Cholmley
cy,	Darcy	ney,	Courtnay
ell,	Torell	ot,	Talbot
er,	Archer.	yle,	Nevile

Some few names whose endings are exceptions from these rules are easily observed by reading, and known to be of French extraction.

Third coroll. Wivil is the last name in most catalogues. First fixed at Stanton Wivil in Leicestershire, where they continued in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of king Henry the Sixth, on this token, that William Wivil, being sworn and examined, did depose that he could expend twenty pounds a year of old rents besides all charges. Of this house was Robert de Wivil bishop of Salisbury, one neither handsome nor learned, but eminent for his long life (forty-five years bishop there) and high spirit, that he would not suffer the castle of Sarum to be parted from his see, challenged by William Mountacute earl of Salisbury, without putting it upon trial of battle. Long since the Wivils here are extinct, bearing gules, frettey vary, a chief or. But there is extant an ancient family of that name in the north, (though different in arms,) augmented in state and honour by matches with the heirs of Pigot, Scroope of Upsal, and Bointon: whereof sir Marmaduke Wivil of Constable-Burton in Richmondshire was created baronet by king James, whose grandchild Marmaduke baronet Wivil married the daughter of Coniers lord Darcy. And I am glad that I may auspiciously close, and conclude my catalogue with so worthy a gentleman; bearing gules, three cheveronels braced in base, gobonee argent and azure, a chief or.

Fourth coroll. All names of gentry which by all-authentical records came over at the conquest are not expressed in any of these catalogues; as Saukvil or

The family of the Wivils graves.

Sackvil, and Waldgrave, we finding two of that surname.

One John Waldgrave a Saxon, living at Waldgrave in Northamptonshire, and possessed of that manor before the conquest.

The other a Walloon of that name, coming over with the conqueror, and employed by him in many services.

The latter of these, on the former his consent that he should marry his only daughter, procured from the conqueror a pardon for his father-in-law, that he might quietly enjoy his lands and livings descending on this Walloon Waldgrave after the other his death. Which pardon, legible in French, was anno 1612 in the possession of the Waldgraves still flourishing in Suffolk¹.

After the conquest several recruits of French in England

Fifth coroll. Let none wonder if some names of worshipful and honourable families, undoubtedly of French original, (but since the conquest,) have not appeared in the aforesaid catalogues. For know that after the conquest, sundry Frenchmen of signal worth entered England at several times, chiefly at the marriage, first, of king Henry the Second to queen Eleanor, who brought the dukedom of Aquitain and earldom of Poitiers for her dowry: secondly, of Edward the Second to Isabella daughter to Philip the Fair, king of France, when three thousand French came over with her, (complained of as a great grievance,) and many settled there. Not to speak of the conquests of king Edward the Third and Henry the Fifth in France, causing such an intercourse of the nations, that then England and France may be said to have born counterchangeably each other's natives.

¹ Approved by John Bagen Righted. See Weaver's Ex. &c. Monuments, p. 757.

Sixth coroll. Many will admire no mention of tradesmen in all these catalogues, being of absolute necessity both in war and peace. For soon would the head of the best monsieur ache without a capper: hands be tanned without a glover; feet be foundred without a tanner, currier, shoemaker; whole body be starved, cold, without weaver, fuller, tailor; hungry, without baker, brewer, cook; harbourless, without mason, smith, and carpenter. Say not it was beneath the French gallantry to stoop to such mean employments, who found all these trades here amongst the English their vassals. For (besides that nothing is base which is honest, and necessary for human society) such as are acquainted with the French both ancient and modern finical humour, know they account our tailors botchers, shoemakers cobblers, cooks slovens, compared to the exactness of their fancy and palate; so that certainly such trades came over with them.

Seventh coroll. But hear what our great antiquary¹ As appears by Domesday-book. saith herein. "In that most authentical register, " Domesday-book in the exchequer, ye shall have " cocus, aurifaber, pictor, pistor, accipitrarius, came- " rarius, venator, piscator, medicus; cook, goldsmith, " painter, baker, falconer, chamberlain, huntsman, " fisher, leach, marshall, porter, and others, which " then held land in capite, and without doubt left " these names to their posterity; albeit haply they " are not mentioned in those tables of Battel-abbey " of such as came in at the conquest."

¹ Camden his Remains, p. 152.

The sad case of the English.

Eighth caroll. Now let me bespeak the reader's pity (though possibly his ingenuous sympathy hath given it before it was requested) for those poor Englishmen who were to find free quarters for all those French. Where could their landlords lodge them? Or rather, how could they long continue landlords, when such potent guests came to their houses? O the several ways which their necessities dictated unto them! Some fought, as the Kentish, who capitulated for their liberty: some fled, as those in the north into Scotland: some hid themselves, as many in middle England in the Isle of Ely: some, as those of Norfolk, traversed their title by law, and that with good success in the old age of king William the Conqueror. Most betook themselves to patience, which taught many a noble hand to work, foot to travel, tongue to intreat; even thanking them for their courtesy who were pleased to restore a shiver of their own loaf which they violently took from them.

END OF VOL. I.

THE BORROWER WILL BE CHARGED
AN OVERDUE FEE IF THIS BOOK IS NOT RETURNED TO THE LIBRARY ON OR BEFORE THE LAST DATE STAMPED
BELOW. NON-RECEIPT OF OVERDUE
NOTICES DOES NOT EXEMPT THE BORROWER FROM OVERDUE FEES.

WIDENER
APR 1 1992
MAY 29 5163

WIDENER
MAR - 2 1992
BOOK DUE

3 204 011843216

